AN UNDERSTANDING CAT. This Story is Vouched For Absolutely.

As striking a cat story as I have heard in a long time comes from Alton, N.H., and is vouched for absolutely. The cat was accustomed to visit the next door neighbor after each meal to be fed and petted, bringing also two kittens.

One of the women at the house thus visited, who had entertained a dislike for cats, finally, on observing the animals, expressed aloud a liking for the gray kitten and said she intended to ask to be allowed to keep it. The next day when mother cat came for her bits only one kitten accom-panied her, but she took some choice morsels for the one left at home. This continued several days, when the woman who had at first expressed intention to get the kitten which the cat was feeding remarked that she had given up wholly the idea of securing the gray kitten. All three felines appeared at the next meal and have
