THE LESS THE ASH THE BETTER THE COAL

It is practically axiomatic for the reason that a small percentage of ash shows almost entire consumption of bituminous coal, giving greater heat value for the cost. Hence the coal we supply proves its high grade by the small amount of ash, none at all of state and the like. It's a corking good coal to use.

A WARM SUBJECT

There's nothing in the world we're so much interested in as Coal at this time of the year. It may sound queer to speak of coal, heating and selling as a science, but that's what we've made it. Two important discoveries we have made are that complete satisfaction to our customers pays best, and that the way to win business is to deserve it.

Saved From Fuel Famine.

The discussions in the commons of Canada and congress of the United States, on the coal question, will do good. The way is not clear as to what can be done. Mr. Roosevelt, who has "one's feet as any man can in the public interest, in the elucidation of a great problem, has not any very definite ideas on the subject. He is quite decided, however, on one point, namely, that the coal lands now in the public possession, a national heritage, should be retained, and developed only with the proviso that the government be the controlling power. Fuel is the greatest need of Canada in winter, and it should not be in the keeping of any corporation, which can close the mines and create a coal famine when it likes or when disputes occur between capital and labour. There is no guarantee, of course, that a strike cannot take place under public ownership, but it is less likely since the government will not invite the clash that sometimes is seen when parties to a dispute become too independent. The government that has been so successful in settling labour troubles would be equally successful in avoiding them were it in control of the mines or had a dominating voice in their management.

Will They Speak Now?

The excitement with regard to Nipissing mining stock continues. The market is still depressed, and in New York the stock is selling low. The Guggenheims, whose names heretofore have stood for all that is substantial in the mining business, have preserved a very profound silence with regard to their action. They had an option, which they let go, and sacrificed at the same time a million and a half of dollars. There was rumors that they were not satisfied with the title, but they have of late refused to discuss the question. The New York press relieves them of the responsibility for the awful slaughter of innocents that has taken place, but while they are not held to account for the commotion in the market they are "blamed" most severely for their silence.

The great lesson of the case—"the crime of the Nipissing" as it is now called—"is that investors in mining stocks should take nobody's word, but make a personal examination of any property in which they intend to put a large amount of capital. The Cobalt region is so near at hand that any person can make a personal visit to it, and examine any property there for $100. This is very cheap insurance, and any large investor who neglects to insure himself should not complain too bitterly."

This advice is for the rich men and the syndicates, who have their experts and do nothing without consultation, but the small investors do things on the advice of friends and brokers, and they are usually going it blind. Congress, it is announced, will appoint a commission and look into the facts, but what can congress do about it?

They may force the Guggenheims to speak, and it would be a satisfaction to know what they were figuring on or what they knew. Perhaps that that would justify the commotion and its appointment.

Issues Of The Hour.

The lords have rejected the measure which the imperial commons passed and in favour of limiting the voting power of the individual. "One man, one vote" is considered the right thing in Canada. The property owner may vote on a money bill, or by-law affecting taxation, in as many wards of the city as he is assessed, but he has only one vote in the constituency on the man who is a candidate for parliament. That may not be the precise proposition which is before the people of Britain, but it is likely to be this, and its rejection is not based on reason and common sense.

The lords are not partial to the radical notions of the commons, and they are disposed to reject whatever is calculated to disturb present conditions. The question is, Did this idea or proposal come before the people in the last election? Did the people pronounce upon it in the general election? If they did they would regard the action of the upper house as offensive, and it will have, sooner or later, to be atoned for. There will be a lull in the clash between the commons and lords for a while. Next session, however, will see the Education bill, the One Man One Vote bill, and the Home Rule bill up for consideration, and if they are severally as jointly discontinued there will be a grievance for the people to consider, for in all probability there will be an immediate dissolution of parliament and general election.

Will the tariff question not be crowded in, and to the diversion of the voters' mind? The Huddersfield election is an indication. It is just over, and the government won in it a notable victory, and the Education bill and the war on the lords was the distinguishing and only issue.
