Special Correspondence Letter, No. 1,544. New York, Dec. 28.-It was Christmas Eve, 1851, and a party of miners had gathered at Molly French's Miners' retreat on the North Fork of the Yuba, just above Oreville, to have a good time and to keep alive the memories of the old home which they hoped to see soon after they had made their pile. The boys were all in love man living outside of Oreville for cabin, Molly didn't mind a tramp through a blinding snowstorm to help dish that a sick man could eat, and as long as her help was needed she was

When Jim French was killed in his claim by a falling rock a party of miners chipped in a hundred dollars each; they bought out the old Fan-shaw placer and fitted it up in first rate style; they christened it "The Miners' Retreat" and gave it to Molly, several months after. As this was the first Christmas eve that came Molshe promised the boys a turkey dinner. Now any man could talk turken anywhere between Cape Cod and the Rio Grande without fear of future punishment and was skirmishin around in that happy land where tur-
