Woodstock, N.B., Jan. 3.—A romantic wedding took place at the home of the bride when Miss Lena Burt, daughter of Wilmot Burt, Jacksonville, was married to Norval Brittain and the couple left for their future home in Revelstoke, B.C.

Before the departure of Mr. Brittain for the west some years ago he was engaged to marry Miss Burt. Their correspondence continued until recently. In the meantime Miss Burt became engaged to a prominent young business man in Woodstock and the wedding was arranged. An announcement card was sent to Mr. Brittain in Revelstoke. He promptly sent along some presents to the bride, but just as it was about to be delivered here a few days ago he arranged another date, one superior to the proposed wedding with the Woodstock man, and his lady loved to go to his western home.

TRAIN JUMPED TRACK.

Soldiers on Way to Kingston Delayed.

Corps, Chapman and Sells, of the 11th Field Battery, Winnipeg, arrived in this city this morning, to take a three months' course of instruction at the Fort Pont Barracks. They were delayed by a train wreck on the track on the train upon which they were travelling having jumped the track this side of Winnipeg.

Yesterday when skaters were enjoying themselves upon the rink on the bay facing the barracks, they were greatly surprised to see a large fish appear at an air hole in the vicinity. It was pulled in by a fisherman and proved to be a large, weighing about forty-five pounds and nearly four feet in length. It was dead, and its mouth was full of minnows. The probability, it had been struck some time ago by the wheel of some steamer.

Corpl. Strood is to-day receiving the congratulations of his friends at the barracks upon the arrival at his home last night, of twins.

A short course of instruction in artillery and riding opened to-day at the barracks. All the men who have been on pass during the Christmas holidays have returned and the general routine of work has again commenced.

POCKETS FULL OF MONEY

How One Scotch Immigrant Returns Home For Christmas.

"I am going back home to spend Christmas and to some of my friends that they better come out here."

Robert Leslie, a young Scotchman who came to Canada some time ago, smiled as he said this leaning against the wall of a corridor that leads into the immigration offices at the Union Station, says The Globe. He looked out from under his somewhat faded cap and carelessly scuffed the floor with his foot, as though he had in his mind no more of the pretty girl who seven miles from Edinburgh where he expects the holly will be hanging from the centre of a room to greet him.

A year ago he came back to Canada, having gone over to Scotland for a visit, and was sent up to work for a farmer near Glasgow. He received $200 and his board for a year. He worked the entire time, finishing his term a few days ago. When he quit he had $200 in his pocket, but the farmer, having drawn only $20 during the twelve months. He worked for a previous year, which he had taken home the first time. His savings of this year he had with him when he came to the immigration office to have a chat with H. J. Tull, who is the officer in charge, and who sent him out to Gorrie. He was extremely dressed, and though wearing several days growth of a downy beard, his appearance was that of an industrious, saving youth, who had visions of a farm of his own some day. When asked how he liked Canada he made the above remark, and added that while sometimes a man coming over here could not save $200 as he had done in the same length of time, still he much preferred this country to his own as a place to make a livelihood.

"I worked steady," he remarked, "and never drew much money, and now I have $200. I came to Toronto with cattle, and am going across to occur in a cattle ship because I know how to handle cattle, and my trip would be worth anything. After Christmas I'll come back to Canada and start working again. I'm going to tell all my friends about how I found back home and sell them, too, that they better come out in the spring."

The other immigrants who stood around looked on at the holding up of successful lawyers and doctors and preachers to country boys as the only models worthy of adoption has been one from the farms to the city. It was all nonsense to expect that the boys would stay on the farm when every teacher was holding up for their emulation. Horace Greeley, Abraham Lincoln, Edward Blake, Rev. Dr. Caven, Dr. G. M. Stewart, from Chicago, why he mentioned. These are great men, but they all possess one characteristic that they all left the farm to accept of a city life, and as a result heaved it in the city. If the agricultural college has done nothing else, it has produced men who in their life work the farm are worthy the emulation of boys both in city and country. Men like Burbank, or Powell of Briarcliff Manor, or Hon. John Dryden, or Prof. Saunders, are worth any amount of newspaper or parental advice in keeping boys on the farm. Kidway's Weekly, in referring to a movement of just inaugurated in the United States with this object in view, says very truly, "The supply of farm labor can be met best by keeping farmers and sons on the soil. This can be accomplished most effectively by infusing the rural schools with the spirit of a high grade agricultural spirit. The exodus from the farm during the past generation was largely due to the poverty of rural education. The National Education Association has already taken steps to organize a department of rural and agricultural education. By means of this study courses, town and city, schools are really taking more interest in rural life than the country schools themselves. Meanwhile many boys are studying about men who achieved distinction by leaving the farm."
