AN APPRECIATION OF THE LATE REV. PROF. NICHOLSON.

Queen's Graduates Harbor the Tenderest Recollections of the Little Professor of Classics.

An appreciation of the late Professor Nicholson of Queen's, appears last week in the pages of the Whig. Lillian Mackinnon, of Halifax. It is thus introduced: "It was the hour for junior Latin, and up in the dim third story of the old arts building the freshmen were hastily congregating to the choral call. 'Now, gentlemen, don't jostle! There is plenty of time to walk in politely. Let the ladies pass in first, gentlemen, and don't stare at them! You've seen them often enough, and you may hope to see them every day. In my time ladies weren't such a common sight in colleges as they are now.' A very little man in professorial garb standing on the platform of the old Latin room, was uttering these words in a stentorian voice, earnestly at variance with his stature. He thundered unceasingly at the awkward squad of freshmen who pitched into the room, even while his eyes shone with friendly sympathy for the shy freshmen, bunched together expectantly under the sloping roof, in laughing, whispering groups.

This was the beginning of a new term at old Queen's, and the appearance of each successive class of plastic minds within the walls of that upper room whence had emerged so many "classical" medalists, never failed to inspire the grave little professor with the joy which comes with new-discovered territory. This junior class was easily first in his regard. Neither the Sanskrit lectures which he had the unique honor of delivering, nor the classes in final honor Latin, where he so eloquently held forth took half so firm a grasp of Professor Nicholson's affections as did this new patriotic class. And each individual member of the class in final honor Latin, where he so eloquently held forth took half so firm a grasp of Professor Nicholson's affections as did this new patriotic class. And each individual member of the class in final honor Latin, where he so eloquently held forth took half so firm a grasp of Professor Nicholson's affections as did this new patriotic class.

"Nickie," the students called him. Disrespectful as the title might seem, it nevertheless carried with it a sense of appreciation and respect, accorded to few in the University. For he had a way of coming very near to the minds of his classes, seeing their limitations synthetically, yet trying in his own bright, irresistible way to give them the better point of view, to open out before them further vistas of thought. His intense zeal for governmental knowledge, his intrepid courage, and, most of all, his never failing kindness and humour, evoked an unending admiration from each new class.

The Paragraph Pulpit

Rev. C. W. CASSON, OTTAWA

A Free Pulpit.

No slave ever stands in a Unitarian pulpit. No minister in his fellowship needs to limit his declarations to the repetition of any dogma. He does not clip the wings of his thought that he may not fly over the wall of orthodoxy. He does not make compromise with his conviction in deference to the prejudices of the pew. He may not always speak the exact truth, but he speaks the honest opinion of the colored and impartial judgment of a free mind. A Unitarian service, even if you do not agree fully with everything expressed. Address Mr. Casson for free literature.

AT THE GRAND.

Cole and Johnson's Fine Production.

In presenting these well-known comedians and composers of negro melodies at the Grand on Saturday, Jan. 19th, matinee and night, an entirely new field has opened to the colored performers. Herbert the satirizing of the current fads and fancies has been the special prerogative of the white artist, but in "their latest offering, "The Snow-Fly Regiment," Cole and Johnson have boldly entered the arena of legitimate musical farce comedy.

"The College Widow."

Henry W. Savage's splendid production of George Ade's comedy masterpiece, "The College Widow," with its faithful prototypes comes to the Grand on Wednesday, Jan. 23rd, and those who are not planning therein an evening of allowed pleasure are those who have not even remotely been in touch with recent stage history.

THE CITIZENS' LEAGUE

Will Seek Reduction of Liquor Licenses From Council.

There was a brief session of the Citizens' League at the Y.M.C.A. last night. In the absence of the president, David Lashlaw, who was unable to be present, Rev. G. E. Manning occupied the chair.

It was the general opinion that a deputation should wait upon the city council at its next session, in reference to the request for a reduction in liquor licenses, and it was decided that such action should be taken.

The league will hold another meeting before the next session of council and make final arrangements for the deputation.

Bed-Time Verses.

Pittsburg Press. When my great-grandma went to bed, In can and gown so trim, A tall candle for her shed Its light to ward and dim.

And when my grandma went to bed, Dressed in her robes of white, A lamp they gave to her which shed A bright yet waning light.

And when my mamma went to bed She took a matron's care, 'The cunning little lamp,' A tall candle for her shed Its light to ward and dim.

And now when I, a matron-child, Have tucked them all, 'good-night,' 'Ora on the electric light.' 'Ora on the electric light.'

And when, some day, a girl of mine Trimly goes to her room, A glowing bit of redium, 'Will drive away the gloom.'

The average man loses nine days' work yearly through illness.

A WARM SUBJECT

There's nothing in the world we're so much interested in as Coal at this time of the year. It may sound queer to speak of coal buying and selling as a science, but that's what we've made it. Two important discoveries we have made are that complete satisfaction to our customers pays best, and that the way to win business is to deserve it.
