The weather has been bad for seve ral Saturdays of late, and this is to be regretted. Every farmer looks forward to going into town once a week and Saturday is always the choice and the good housekeepers in the city are just as eager to see their country cousins in the city.

Here's to the weather man, may he manage to squeeze in a few good Saturdays for the markets. The rain on Saturday last, put a sort of damper on the usually brisk market. It was a day that all the farmers would have advocated having shelter credted for the rigs.

Two citizens were engaged in conversation on the market the other day "I'll tell you there is a practice going on at this market which I think should be stopped," said one. "What is that?" said the friend,
