Language Experts of ternational Correspondence Schools Become Interpreters For the Town of Waterloo, NIZED AT LAST.

Iowa. The language of the old man of Waterloo, lowa, has at last been interpreted. He wandered into the town of Waterloo about tenidays ago, aged and decrepit, and speaking a tongue that no one could understand.

After every means at hand failed to discover what the old man's words were meant to convey, the local agent of the International Correspondence the characteristic energy of an I.C.S. agent, vowed he would get intelligence out of the strange old man's articulations, if he had to try every country on the globe for an interpreter.
