KIPLING AS A TYPE.

French War Novel Hero Centres About English Author. "Dingley, the Famous Author," which has been awarded the "Prix Gencourt" as the best French novel of the year, it generally regarded as based on a study of Kipling. Anyhow, the fictitious famous author bears a striking resemblance in many re spects to the living one. He is portrayed as an Englishman of letters who has won fame at 40, whose verses soldiers sing when they set out to fight, and who has supreme confidence in the mission of the Anglo-Saxon race. While his countrymen are getting the worst of it in the earlier stages of the Boer war, he conceives the idea of stimulating patriotic pride by writing a novel which a worthless loafer enlists and in the field finds himself and develops into a conquering hero. That sounds quite Kiplingesque. To get the proper local color for his book he goes to Cape Town with his wife and child. Leaving them, he starts for the veldt. A message reaches him that his child is dangerously ill. On his way back to Cape Town he is captured by a Boer, who, on hearing his story, lets him go and assists him on his way. By this means he succeeds in reaching his child in time to kiss it before it dies.

In the course of the war the Boer is taken prisoner and condemned to death. It is then Dingley shows that he is no true Kipling after all. He refuses to intercede for the chivalrous foe who had befriended him and he is executed. Dingley's novel makes a hit. Its dramatic incidents are shown by a bioscope in a London music hall. And the picture of the execution of the Boer arouses tremendous enthu-

The book is not calculated to promote the entente cordiale. And friends of Kipling will resent the association of his characteristics with those of a dastardly ingrate. But it is a powerful, vigorous work. It is the joint production of two brothers, Jerome and Jean Theraud, who are not yet 30 years of age. They are journalists by profession and devote their leisure to writing novels. Their methods are those of Kipling. They insist on seeing things themsel ves and studying life in all its phases their imaginations for characters and incidents. Fame has come to them earlier than it did to Kipling, and brilliant literary careers are predicted for them.

John Burns As a Minister.

Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., has lately been giving his views of various parliamentary colleagues. What he has to say about John Burns is particularly interesting. After reminding us that Mr. Burns is a Scot who has come south to show the mere Saxon how things ought to be done, Mr. Russell proceeds :- "An engineer by trade, Mr Burns has combined hard work with effective social and political agitation. He has dealt with 'niggers' in Africa, has defied the law in Trafalgar Square, been at least once in gaol, worked hard on the County Councilstill harder in the House of Commons—is strong in body and mind. And as President of the Local Government Board he has now to deal with the most acute of all our social problems-the poor law and want of employment. And it is a problem which he wisely refuses to have rushed. Mr. Burns, sitting in Charles street, has a fine scope for his powers as a statesman,-and even for his imagination. which sometimes runs away with him. In the crucial question of unemployment it was a study to watch him

I know all about that sort of thing-and it does not impress me. Nor do I believe in the clamor about farm and labor colonies. I have seen these agencies at work. I don't even believe in certain Salvation Army methods. I believe the unemployed are to a large extent the "unemployable." The loafer is largely in evidence. And I want to get to the bottom of the thing before I act. I mean business-but of a real kind Two hundred thousand pounds will be available from the State, should necessity arise during the winter. A Great Engineer.

Sir Alexander Kennedy is one of the foremost figures in the engineering world. It was in 1875 that Sir Alexander devised and established the engineering laboratory at University College, which was the first of its kind in this country. He has acted as chief engineer to the Westminster Electric Supply Corporation, Limited, since its formation, and designed the whole system of its various stations. A great number of Scottish and North of England towns owe their system of electric lighting to Six Alexander's schemes. The South London, electric tramways, and the Waterloo and City Electric Railway are which this distinguished engineer is in the main responsible. But possibly Sir Alexander's greatest claim to public gratitude was his unflinching attitude in the matter of engine and boiler trials at sea. He emphasized the necessity of separating the boiler trials from those of the engine, and although his ideas were received with great opposition, he eventually obtained permission to carry out such trials.
