lanadian Courier. Thirteen years or so ago "Joe" Haycock, now happy in a government position, was leader of the patron "extreme left" in the legislature, Goldwin Smith read his characteristic Farrer to bring patron chief down to the Grange for a talk.

The invitation was accepted, and, seated in the philosopher's library, Goldwin Smith remarked that perhaps Mr. Haycock would accept some refreshments, Mr. Haycock would. Mr. Haycock nominated whiskey-and had to drink alone as the other two were abstainers. Three or four times during the hour or so Mr. Haycock would grasp the decanter by the neck, shake it vigorously and pour out a moderate libation. Finally farewells were said and Farrer and Haycock went back to the Queen's Park, Farrer he remarked that Haveock was a man of great originality. "But will you tell me," asked the philosopher, "why he observed that curious rite libel, and he paid dearly for letting of violently agitating the decanter before pouring out the whiskey?" New Farrer's knowledge of Canada
