RESCUE TOO LATE

IRISH MOUNTAIN. Five Men Go Astray in Fog and

Have Terrible All-Night Ex-Belfast, April 2.-A mountain tragedy, involving the death of three men, was reported from County An-

Five men, named Connolly, Keilty, White, Millar and Smith, started on Wednesday on a shooting expedition on the mountain range which overlooks the beautiful Vale of Glenariff. Two or three hours later they lost themselves in a dense fog. They wandered aimlessly about and endeavored to find one of the beaten tracks; but without success. At length hunger brought on extreme fatigue. The men, alone and lost in the mountains, had scarcely the strength to walk, and the bitterly cold wind partially paralyzed their limbs. Darkness came on, and the men were still ignorant of their where-

After a while Connolly said he could no further, and he fell to the ground exhausted. His four companions, although almost as weak as he, picked him up and, by an effort which taxed their remaining strength to the utmost, carried him over boulders and through gullies until they themselves were on the point of collapsing.

Then they put him down, placed him ing. under shelter in a sitting position, wrapped him in their greatcoats and having thus done all they could for his comfort, left him and went away to look for assistance.

Millar and Smith went in one direct tion and Keilty and White in another, The first-named reached the residence of Conway Dobbs, at Parkmore, yesvesterday morning. They were in the last stage of exhaustion, and as they entered the house they sank helplessly on a couch.

Restoratives were applied, and when they related their terrible experience. A search party was at once organized, and with Millar and Smith acting as guides, they all tramped to the spot where Connolly had been left. He was sitting there still wrapped in his companions' coats, but dead. He had been frozen to death. Later in the afternoon the dead bodies of Keilty and White found in the bed of a frozen moun tain stream. The men had evidently stumbled there, and had been weak to rise.

Royalties' Pleasures. Queen Alexandra's chief delight, at any time, is, says a writer in the By stander, to do her own shopping, and it was always the greatest treat she could give her daughters. To go into a shop, especially when they imagined themselves unrecognized, and to buy and choose at their own sweet will, was like heaven to them. When the princess royal married the Duke of Fife, she, too, enjoyed, I remember, a perfect orgy of shopping. By some piece of inadvertence, I once found myself soon, after her marriage in the Edgware road, near the Marble Arch, on a Sunday morning. There I saw her royal highness. She was peer ing into every shop window which had the shutters up, and was as parently enjoying herself hugely. s quaint to find that members of the royal family should take this hug delight to being unnoticed. TORONTO, ONT. Household Hints.
