Joseph Greig, City Dealer of Chicago

The Chicago women's crusade against dishonest dealers is a remarkable story of self-protection and collective action. It began in the early months of the war when many women found themselves short-changed by unscrupulous merchants. The women of Chicago organized themselves into a league, determined to expose the practices of these dishonest dealers and to protect their own interests. They held public hearings, presented evidence, and demanded justice. Their efforts have led to the exposure of many notorious dealers and the implementation of measures to prevent such practices in the future.
