Ottawa, May 13 .- A tragedy in a way remarkable occurred; Sunday atternoon. E. P. Johnson, a prominent Ottawan, was attending the Russell as possible. He dines in her room theatre, where Hon. William G. Ewing, late judge of the Chicago supreme court, was giving a lecture on Christian Science, when he fainted. Johnson was carried from the auditorium to the ladies' waiting room of theatre, but was dead in less than five minutes, even before Dr. McKinnon, living across the street from the theatre, could reach his side.

His daughter had sat with him, but was sent home in a cab, and was only under the belief that her father was sick. Neither the eminent lecturer nor George Lowe, head of the Christian Science church here, and who were on the platform, nor more than one or two of the big audience, knew of the tragedy until after the lecture. Heart disease caused death. Mr. Johnson leaves, a widow and two daughters here and two sons, Chauncey, of Toronto, and Alfred, in the Bank of Commerce, Chicago.

The Next Show.

The Hamilton Times says: There were some good singers and dancers in the colored troupe that held the boards at the Grand, last night, presenting "The Hottest Coon in Dixie," and at the price the show was the best of the kind seen here this season. There was lots of action in the play, and the performance went with a dash. It was on the same broad lines as Williams & Walker's "In Abyssinia, but it was not staged as well. However, some of the costumes were very pretty; colored stage folks generally month for minor contagious diseases.

There were some pretty solos, duets, trios and choruses. Andrew Copeland, n the title role, sang several songs and got a good reception. After their eight years in Canonly about one-ninth of the Doukhobors decided to become Canadian citizens. The tenet they held to was "God is our king, we cannot become subject to any earthly sovereign." Thus they refuse to become owners of the land they have tilled. The alternative, offered by the minis ter of the interior, to claiming citizenship is the creation of reserves around the villages to the extent of fifteen acres per soul. The Doukhobors have, in eight years, cultivated five acres per head of population. After the commission had explained in English and Russian the facts of the option in sixty-one settlements they found, on their final trip, that 8.175 people decreed to remain community and declined naturalization. Thus sixty-one reserves been created, forty-eight in Yorkton district and thirteen in Prince Albert; this utilized 768 quarter sections of land. To those who became citizens, 533 homesteads were issued and the settlement leaves 1,618 homesteads. hitherto belonging to the Doukho bors, at the disposal of the government. The minister will open these for general entry on June 1st. They consist of good agricultural land.

MARK TWAIN'S CIGARS. He Smoked the Ones He Had For

Samuel L. Clemens is said to be ex traordinarily forgetful in one respect When at his literary labors it is the usual thing for him to become totally unaware of whether or not he has cigar in his month, and this resulted in an amusing incident.

"It is remarkable the rapidity with which my cigars disappear," he said in his dry drawl to the dealer from whom he buys them. "Mind, I don't mean to cast aspersions on any mem ber of my household but myself," he hastened to add, with a sly twinkle. "As yet I haven't been able to detect myself as the culprit who gets away with so many cigars, but I have

"Perhaps I can aid you to discover the guilty one," suggested the tobacconist. "I'll fix up some of them with horse-hair and rubber, and then at least you will know if you yourself

you were going to send me?" he er The dealer regarded him with astonshment. "I did send them just after you were here," he replied. "They were in the square box, and each was tied with a white ribbon as we agreed upon. Didn't you get them?" "Why, bless my soul! were those the ones?" was the innocent response. "Of course, I got that box, and smoked them, for after the first no one would have touched them.

The Marital Unrest.

Caroline Duer in June Delineator. In the time of our great-grandmoth ers and grandmothers nobody thought of dissolving the marriage tie. A woman's career was marriage, and hav ing once embarked upon it she never considered going back.

But in these days debate is rampant, and so many persons have "considered going back" that one wonders what slight reciprocal affection induced them ever to advance at all Probably it was not affection, but at traction, which depends upon outward and visible signs rather than inward spiritual graces, and can cause the most unlikely and unblendabl characters to find each other irresisti bly charming. And while they are finding each other charming, marriage is so easy! Since the beginning of the world, admonition and advice have done very little toward the curbing of ed to excite it.

passion, and obstacles have only serv-And it is not too much to say that most young people, if left to form their own characters, with little in the way of responsibility forced upon them and a great deal in the way of comfort and pleasure at their right hand, will form rather self-indulgent haracters, which, rushing rapturously into matrimony, as it were into he seventh heaven, are exceedingly chagrined to find how much self-denial is demanded of them when they get there. Nobody has explained to them what marriage, and the companionship of it really means, nor what a und of tact and tenderness, forbearance, good-will and gentle judgment must have to tide over the hard places that come, at times, to even the most loving couples.

What Dick Turpin Did.

Dick Turpin was really a most unromantic ruffian, who first appears in history about 1735 at Loughton, where he threatened to put an old Mrs. Shelley on the fire unless she gave him her money. Turpin's "sphere of influence" was not Hounslow Heath but Epping Forest, and the only true part of the popular myth is that he really did shoot his comrade Tom King. The legendary ride to York on Black Bess was performed, if at all, by "Swift Nick" Nevison, who in 1676 robbed a sailor on Gads Hill at 4 a.m., and established an alibi by appearing the same evening on the bowling green at York,
