EXPERIMENT A FAILURE.

The consolidated school of Guelph township is financially in trouble. Four of the school sections have decided to contribute towards the $1,200 which are necessary to maintain it. There is only one alternative—the government or Sir William Macdonald must supply the funds or the school will be closed.

The additional tax which the scheme involved—education at the highest point of excellence and under the most acceptable conditions—is only two mills on the dollar, but the people will have none of it. Perhaps there are not anywhere in Canada rural taxpayers who are better able to make sacrifices for a good cause than those of Guelph township, and they are not slow in defending their position.

The inference is obvious—that the time for expensive experiments in education has not yet arrived in Canada. It is true that there are consolidated schools in the maritime provinces, and they are in operation, thanks to the generosity of Sir William Macdonald. They may be permanently endowed. If they are not one can foresee what is to happen as soon as the great millionaire discontinues his contributions.

STING OF CONSCIENCE.

The preacher who performed the ceremony which united W. E. Corey, the steel trust king, and Miss Gillman in marriage, has occasion to mourn his imprudence in such a solemn and sacred ceremony.

The experience is remarkable. It shows that the heart of America is after all sound on great moral questions. Divorces do not starve the people, for there are scores of them annually. But the circumstances of most of them have not affected the masses as the Corey divorce has done. The deed of release was sought by the wife, whose abandonment was enough to break her heart. She was his help-met in poverty and pinch. She inspired his ambitions and helped him to climb to prominence and power. She shared his toil and anxiety and should have shared his prosperity.

After he became the president of the steel trust he saw Miss Gillman, an actress, and he chased her about the country and never ceased his attention until he got her consent to marry him. He had no fault to find with his wife. He simply let her go and under circumstances that aroused the public ire. Corey and his spouse may enjoy their trip abroad and their cooling in the million-dollar chateau in France, which he gave her as a wedding present, but later on they will feel the sting of outraged conscience.

MUNICIPAL TRADING IN ENGLAND

Major Leonard Darwin, a son of the great scientist, has been discussing municipal trading in Montreal. He has been impressing on the audience how he has addressed the fact that though there have been failures in the public business the evidence is clear that some things can be run by the municipality to the great advantage of the people.

Attention has been concentrated upon the great schemes of the socialists, some of the wild ventures in which they indulged while in power in London. There is the Thames steamboat service, an expensive undertaking, expensively managed, and a loss to the public from its beginning. There is the electrical system at Tunbridge Wells, which has been abandoned, with depressing effects financially. There is the palatial plan of housing and caring for the poor, which must sooner or later invite attack and provoke a feeling of hostility.

Public ownership is all right in its place, and when limited in its scope. The people can manage the water and light business as well as the private corporation, under certain conditions. There has to be expert direction, and it should proceed from one who is recognized as able and expert and free to act according to his judgment. The people can invest in the plant necessary to give them the best service at the lowest cost. But the people cannot run all kinds of business economically and safely.

The history of the municipal trading movement in England, as gathered up by Prof. Meyer, of Chicago, tells of failure, of stiffer ambition, of stunted growth in private enterprise, of considerable restraint in commercial activity. Wherever the municipal ownership idea has been too much nurtured there has been a paralysis of business, for without the competition, that is the life of all trade, there has been dullness, decadence, and to some extent demoralization. And the experience of England is likewise the experience of America as it has been summed up in the imperfect statistics which have been given to the press.

That's The Suspicion.

At the meeting of the W.C.T.U. at Winnipeg, the statement was made that in Manitoba the proportion of drunkards to the population is greater than in any other province. This is bad. The people must be taking too much of something to correct the effects of that dry cold winter weather we hear so much about.

Enforce The Law.

Some conservative papers are complaining that workmen on public utilities are not paying any attention to the Lemoine act. There are quite a number of persons who do not pay any attention to the law against theft, violence or slander, but no one suggests that these laws should be abandoned. All that is asked is that they be enforced.

The College Question.

The Normal College was doing well here. It had been raised to a position of efficiency and respect in the profession—something that could not be said for it before it was brought to Hamilton. It has no proper place in the university, and the government's recent actions are admissions of that fact. But Toronto wanted it, and its envy has led to begrudge. There were none to speak in behalf of Hamilton, or the best interests of the teaching profession. And middle-class confusion and confusion result, and the people pay dearly for it.

DREDGE IS COMING

TO DO WORK IN KINGSTON HARBOR.

Mayor Mowat Announces to the City Council What the Ottawa Government is Going to Do For the Limestone City.

Mayor Mowat had some very pleasing announcements to make to the city council, last evening. He stated that before the smelters could be built, the city had to give the companies assurance that the harbor dredged so that vessels could land at the smelters wharves to be constructed. The deputy minister of marine had written Hon. Mr. Herby that the dredge Sir Richard would begin work at the place in question just as soon as the smelting companies started to build their plants. This information imparted by the mayor was received with applause from the aldermen's chairs.

His worship also announced that Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, who was acting minister of marine, had informed him that the dredge Sir Richard was waiting at Montreal for the tug St. Paul, and would proceed to Kingston very shortly, to dredge out the slips, which the council had asked done.

Again, the mayor intimated that the city's request for stone from the penitentiary for repairs to certain streets would, in all probability, be granted. Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, he could say, would agree to any reasonable proposition in that regard.

Fourthly, Mayor Mowat announced that a government surveyor, who he here this week to look over the land asked for by the city for the extension of King, Ontario and Bay streets, to the water's edge, and to see what could be done.

Thus, it will be seen what Mr. Herby and Mayor Mowat have been able to get for Kingston. When they get busy, times come their way.

The mayor also addressed the council relative to the proposed road construction by-law. He hoped that the board of works would not defer this matter too long, but get the by-law in shape so that it could be submitted to the people at not too late a date.

His worship mentioned that the city's revised by-laws were now complete, and the volumes ready for distribution. The book, he said, was a credit to the printing establishment that turned it out, viz., the Whig job department, and it was the equal in binding of any law book. City Solicitor McIntyre, he said, was to be congratulated upon the able work he had done in compiling the by-laws. Mr. McIntyre had put his whole heart into the work, and done it all alone. In Toronto, a big commission of lawyers and judges had been appointed for the purpose, but Kingston had a city solicitor who was equal to the task.
