PRODUCTION OF LEO
AT GRAND OPERA HOUSE LAST EVENING.

The Play Given By Local Talent—It Made a Big Hit Before a Large Audience—The Characters.

That Kingston possesses talent of high merit, was amply shown at the Grand Opera House last evening, when "Leo, the Royal Cadet," a military romance, in four acts, was given by a company of Kingstonians, over two hundred strong, before a large audience—and one that was more than pleased with the production. Declining as it does with military life, the play is one that is very interesting throughout.

"Leo, the Royal Cadet," is a brilliant piece of music, and contains a treat that should not be missed. The members of the company went through their different parts in a way that was most pleasing and creditable to themselves.

Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Telgmann, in charge of all the arrangements for the production, are deserving of great praise for the most successful result.

In the role of Leo, the Royal cadet, and hero, George B. Cummings was all that could be desired, and W. E. Manhardt, as Capt. Wellington Bloodswigger, a true British soldier, was equally as good. Q.M. Sergt. Bailey, as Wind, the college poet, who was always writing poems, and for fear he would forget them, was very amusing, and put the necessary life in his part. Miss May Hinckley, as Nellie, Leo's sweetheart, gave a good interpretation of her part, as did also Miss Vera Henderson, as Caroline, leader of the maidens. A. Lemmon takes an important part as Gaspard, a man of the world, and he did the part ample justice. His singing was good. The role of Bellows, a love-sick rascal, was ably handled by Plummett Green, and Charles Hall and Capt. W. Hazlett, as jolly landlords, filled the bill in every respect. All the other parts were well portrayed.

The play opens with a Canadian picnic resort. Leo, a son of Wind, the poet, are inspired by Capt. Bloodswigger's song, "Glory and Victory," to become soldiers.

They join the ranks and the finale of the first act shows Leo, bidding farewell to his pumpkin pie, home and sweet-heart Nellie, as he and his friend, Wind, leave for the Royal Military College. The dialogue throughout is interesting, and several fine musical numbers are introduced.

In the second act, the scene is shifted to the Royal Military College and Fort Henry, and included in the musical selections in this act, is that of "We Are Soldiers, and Our Country's Men" sung by Leo, and the cadets.

Wind gets into trouble in this act, and there is a great deal of fun which centers around him. He has day dreams of his fairy opera, and forgets himself so far as to neglect his duty, when he is placed in guard. For this he receives C.B. for twenty-eight days.

Caroline, and the Maidens' Drum Corps appear later on, and the march of the life and drum by the lady and gentlemen cadets, with the British flag floating in the breeze, is a very nice spectacle.

The Dudes are also introduced, and sing a fine song; before the curtain drops, there is shown a grand tableau to the soldiers, as they are about to leave for South Africa. It is realistic in every detail.

The battle of Isandlwana between the British and the Zulus, is the feature of the third act, and it is indeed well put on. It is given at the close of the act, and the audience warms up aplauded. The weird war song, choruses and dance by Cetsho and Zulus, is a stirring event, and is well put on.

In the final act, Nellie is found mourning the death of Leo. It had been announced in the newspapers that her lover had been killed on the battlefield, but it was a mistake. Returns with the rest of the regiment, and there is a happy ending—just like all plays and stock books.

Thus a brief outline of the play it has been given, to draw your attention to the Royal Cadet, "Leo, the Royal Cadet," that is in "Leo, the Royal Cadet."

Little Miss Norma Hughes made quite a hit in her song, "In the Usual Way," which was one of the best numbers. Leo's song, "Farewell, Pumpkin Pie," was well rendered, and warmly encored.

The singing of Miss Hinckley and Miss Henderson was especially good, and both well deserved the unstinted applause given their different numbers.

The Maidens and the Lady Cadets formed a strong chorus, and made a most creditable showing. The countrymen, sailors, kitlines, canteens, dances and Zulus, were all good.

The regular opera house orchestra was added to materially for the occasion, and between the acts a fine programme was rendered.

The costumes were pretty, and well arranged, the staging was perfect, the lighting good, and it can truly said that "The Queen's" production of "Leo, the Royal Cadet" was a great success from every standpoint. It will be given to-night, Saturday night and matinee, and should be attended by every Kingstonian. Such good local talent as has been shown in this latest success, should be highly appreciated.

Below is given the full cast of the place, the patronesses, the chaperones, and members of the special orchestra.

It might be stated, that the play is being given for the benefit of the Highland Cadets, under the patronage of Col. Gordon and officers of the Regiment.

Albert Robinson, Queen Street Has Narrow Escape.

While taping a six-inch main on Brock street, Thursday afternoon, Albert Robinson, a young man residing on Queen street, and employed by the civic light plant, remained too long in the gas pit, and was overcome by the gas. He recovered from the effects during the night, and was able to resume his work Friday morning.

Robinson was found in the pit by other workmen, and Dr. Boagart was immediately summoned, and in the course of an hour or so the patient was brought around all right.

Prize For A Nurse.

At the general hospital nurse's home last evening, a presentation took place.

W. W. Gibson, druggist, who has lectured for the past season to the nurses on pharmacology and materia medica, offered a valuable hypodermic syringe to the one taking the highest mark on his examination. Miss Scott, superintendent, announced that the winner of the prize was Miss Chapman, of Ottawa, and Mr. Gibson made the presentation in presence of a number of nurses in the reception room.

The whole class, he said, had taken a high percentage on the paper. Afterwards Mr. Gibson entertained the gathering with his chocolates. The nurses have voted the Red Cross druggist as their "candy boy," and nominate him for alderman.
