manufactured especially for the heating of large halls and public edifices, is designed to thoroughly warm the greatest amount of cold air in the least possible time. Entering the flues, as shown in the accompanying cross section of the fire pot, the cold air is taken up through this heated column which overhangs the fire, as illustrated, thus coming in direct contact with all products of combustion and insuring a very rapid circulation. This warmed air ascending straight through the flues in which it started, can be carried direct, with practically all its heat retained, to the furthest and coldest part of the building. WRITE FOR CATALOGUE.
