> "THE MAN WHO IS SURE"

The man who is sure to himself is safe in any company. Self-confidence is of nestimable service to man throughout life, for it gives him initiative and enterprise, which are at the bottom of all great successes. Timidity, distrust of one's own powers, the thought of failure, are unmanning. He who is bashful when walking into a parlor will appear more like a clown than a gentleman. The man whose knees knock together and whose voice shakes when he addresses a convention will be heard with a measure of contempt. A merchant invariably approaches every undertaking with confidence or fear -when with "confidence" victory is half won-it is the spirit that marks successful advertising-confidence plus persistence-which
