A VERY CLOSE CALL

NORWAY'S QUEEN NARROWLY ESCAPES DEATH.

Accident During Visit to Paris More Serious Than the Cable Dispatches Disclosed at the Time.

Paris, June 12.—Few sovereigns have ever visited Paris who have left behind them such a good impression as have King Haakon and Queen Maud of Norway, who left just before a most agreeable sojourn here.

Details of the accident which occurred to the youthful queen, but a mere mention of which was telegraphed abroad, show that she had a very narrow escape from death or serious injury.

The accident occurred on her visit to Versailles. A narrow stone bridge crosses a deep stream in the Trianon park. The queen and Mme. Fallieres were being driven over it, when the rear front wheel of their carriage struck the low parapet, the sudden jerk throwing one of the horses, mounted by a postillion, halfway over the edge.

The carriage was tilted to a sharp angle, and was only prevented from falling by striking the trunk of a tree. The weight of the horses in the stream began to be felt, and the carriage was gradually being drawn after them.

Queen turned very white, but made no sound. Mme. Fallieres cried aloud. King Haakon, who was driving with M. Fallieres in front, heard the cry, leaped from his carriage, rushed to the queen's help. M. Dufranc-Beaumez, the secretary for fine arts, who was in the queen's carriage, was doing his best to reassure them.

Before King Haakon could arrive, the peril was past. Two draughts of the royal escort sprang from their saddles, plunged into the stream and, with drawn swords, hooked at the entangling harness. In a few seconds the carriage was freed and the horses and postillion drifted with the stream.

The queen was helped at once from the carriage, and quickly assured her husband that she was unhurt. Mme. Fallieres also escaped injury, though a good deal shaken.

While the queen was being congratulated on her escape, the escort was busy in saving the injured postillion and the horses. One of the latter broke its leg in the fall and was drowned. The postillion was seriously injured.

The royal party walked for about a third of a mile to the Petit Trianon, where a fresh carriage was in waiting and the carriage was recovered from her alarm, and appeared unperturbed when she reached Paris again.

Stole A Gold Cup.

London, June 19.—The Ascot gold cup, valued at about $2,500, which was to be run for, to-morrow, was stolen from the table, back of the grand stand, at Ascot, where it was to be exhibited. On one side of the stolen cup was the King's gold cup, the Royal Hunt cup, the former, which was yesterday, while the latter was to be competed for today. Neither of these were touched. There is no clue to the thief.

WEATHER CHANGE

THE HIGH BAROMETER HAS NOW SHIFTED.

Veteran Botanist Says There Is Nothing Abnormal About the Hot Wave—Foolish-pools Theoretically.

Ottawa, June 19.—Prof. Macoun, the veteran botanist, speaking of the hot wave, said:

"There was nothing abnormal about this weather. It simply means that the winter conditions instead of ending in March lasted until June. I said before when people were talking about the cold spell, that it would last as long as the high barometer continued in the north. We then had north-north-easterly and north-westerly winds. The air flowed down the same as water to the place of low pressure.

Now the high barometer has shifted probably to the Atlantic, and the prevailing winds are south, south-east and south-west.

The change was brought about by the hurricane which we read about and we have at last passed out of winter conditions. My opinion has been that such things as the gull stream, Mars or a second moon never had anything to do with the weather. Another point is that nobody can tell what kind of weather we are going to have the rest of the summer, and persons who talk about hot days and dry days to come, have no ground for their statements."
