A commissioner was appointed t visit Brantford. He took the affidavits of several persons, and incidentally the statement or affidavit of Mr Woodyatt. The form was, therefore, varied, and evidence was not received as in the Van Zant and Gardiner cases. The result is a demand for the signation of the magistrate, and the refusal of Mr. Woodyatt to admit, by voluntary retirement, that he has rendered himself unfit for the service

The Brantford Courier has given to the world the worst side of the case, because it represents hostile political opinion. But it has not shown that Mr. Woodyatt has done that for which he should be removed from office. He may have been irritated by local cirumstances, and on the two occasions used intemperate language and some lergymen can sometimes provoke to anger-but there was nothing apparently about the case which merited They are older, and most of them are the severe judgment that the government is disposed to pronounce upon it.
