

ay forget the tender-
steak—the crispness
but you will ne'er
forget the satisfying deliciousness of your breakfast
Chase & Sanborn's
RAND COFFEE.

BOTHERS
A range will save you half the Half the year—warm weather—

Oxford
Gas Range

will support a heavy roast Asbestos lined oven prevents radiation and ensures a very kitchen. Has shimmering burners that economize on all day boiling, etc., and has giant burners for quick burning entrees.
We want you to call in and see this range. We can prove to you that it is the one you should buy.
The price of this high-grade gas range, with 16-inch oven, is $18 to $20, according to finish.
If you burn natural gas we can fit it for
that purpose.
Co., Limited.
The Yellow Store, 211-213
Leading Dealers Everywhere.

ea the Food for Outing is CUIT

imparts nourishments and makes the burden of hot wear-and ready-to-serve,
cheese, or marmalades.
2 for 25c.

PINEAPPLES
BANANAS.

Princess Street

the price ld be put ey market bability be amous propany and rectorate.

ker,

REMEMBER TO-MORROW, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26TH RONEY & CO'S. BIG SALE.

You Are All Invited. Bargains for Everybody.
Doors Open at 9 A.M.

ADMISSION FREE.

RONEY & CO.,

Kingston, Ont.

No. 127 Princess Street,

— THE STORE THAT SETS THE PACE.

ALL FOR A GIRL.

Keeping close to the shadows and carefully avoiding any possibility of being seen, even at this, the hour of midnight, Malcolm Rogers stole along until he reached the rear of the village post-office. Then for the first time he hesitated. For the first time the full enormity of what he was about to do made him pause as the thought flashed through his mind. But he must have had the last laugh. To think that in returning Beatrice Armstrong would read his passionate words of love, the words he had been too timid to speak to her—was well nigh enough to craze a man of his nervous Don Quixotic temperament. For within an hour after he had dropped the letter through the mail slot in the door of the village post-office that evening he had heard that Beatrice was to become the bride of another.

He tried the window, then gave a start of amazement. Some one was ahead of him. By the soft flash of his pocket electric lantern he could vaguely discern the outlines of two men busily at work upon the safe in the corner.

Suddenly they dodged across the room, there was an angry sputtering at the safe door, then the roar of an explosion and Rogers was thrown to the ground half stunned. What took place in the next few minutes seemed like the half-real visions of a nightmare.

Though he had no remembrance of running, he found himself crouched a corner far down the street. There were the shrill whistles of the village constables, the sounds of running, revolver shots and then someone dashed around the corner and right into his arms. Some one with a smoking revolver in his hand and a black mask over the upper half of his face. Instantly the two men grappled each other, the mask fell off and—

"Jack Ormsby!" gasped Rogers.

"You!" and Ormsby made a futile attempt to free himself. "Let me go," he panted, "or—" and he suddenly Beware of Ointments For Catarrh That Contain Mercury.

In mercury will surely destroy the sensitive and complexion change the whole system, entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should be used except on prescriptions from reliable physicians, as the damage you will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Cure, Tincture of Zinc, Dr. J. C. Chase & Son's Ointment contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the skin and mucous membranes. It is a good ointment. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and makes a good tonic. Dr. J. C. Chase & Co. of New York. Sold by Druggists. Price 75c per bottle.

The Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

tried to raise his pistol.

But Rogers held the wrist in a powerful grasp. "Ormsby," he said slowly, in a voice vibrant with horror, "Ormsby, I could kill you. I love Beatrice Armstrong. I would have told her so, but I found she was pledged to you. Am you—my God! and you—a thief!"

There were the sounds of rapid footsteps and shouts from the direction of the postoffice. Ormsby struggled desperately for a moment, then a cunning look flashed over his face.

"Rogers," he said, "for her sake—"

The footsteps were rapidly nearing. Suddenly Rogers snatched the revolver from the other. "Give me your word you will be true to her, that you will lead an honest life."

Ormsby shook in an agony of fear. The pursued was almost upon him.

"Please save yourself," replied he, and, stooping quickly, he picked up the mask and attached it to his own face. When the constables rushed upon him an instant later, he passively put up his hands, allowed himself to be handcuffed, and five minutes later was in the town lock-up.

It was not until the next morning at the preliminary hearing before the local justice of the peace where he was held without bail for the next term of the supreme court that Rogers learned he was not alone burglar.

He must answer for, but murder, for one of the constables had been shot and killed. One of the yeggmen had also met death.

Two days had passed, two days in which Rogers had suffered all that of his sensitive nature can suffer during a first imprisonment and under such an awful charge, when his jailer announced a visitor. To his amazement and shame Beatrice Armstrong was ushered to his cell door.

"Oh, Malcolm," she cried, and Rogers saw that her eyes were red with weeping. "I had to come. I wanted to tell you that [—] that I—"

Then her voice caught. She dropped her head upon her arms clasped against the bars of the cell door and her form shuddered with sobs.

For an instant the prisoner forgot his part. His hand lightly touched her fair hair and in a voice of infinite tenderness he said: "Don't cry, dearest little girl, please don't cry. I know you are sorry for me because I—"

Then suddenly he remembered. He sprang back. "But—but I am a murderer—they say. What would Ormsby say if he knew you were here?"

"Ormsby!" cried Beatrice. "What do you mean?"

"Why, Ormsby, your betrothed."

"Jack Ormsby is nothing to me. Who said you were betrothed? I can't see that you ever loved me. I wonder why you did not speak, and then yesterday your letter came. I was so happy and then they told me what had happened the night before—but, oh, Malcolm! I don't believe it. I won't believe it. Tell me it isn't true. Let me help you."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers' innocence was already proved. For some time the police had suspected Jack Ormsby of being at the head of the band of yeggmen which had terrorized the surrounding country and that very day he was captured in a neighboring town after a desperate fight. He was fatally wounded and confessed all.

"Rogers," he said, "for her sake—"

The footsteps were rapidly nearing. Suddenly Rogers snatched the revolver from the other. "Give me your word you will be true to her, that you will lead an honest life."

Ormsby shook in an agony of fear. The pursued was almost upon him.

"Please save yourself," replied he, and, stooping quickly, he picked up the mask and attached it to his own face. When the constables rushed upon him an instant later, he passively put up his hands, allowed himself to be handcuffed, and five minutes later was in the town lock-up.

It was not until the next morning at the preliminary hearing before the local justice of the peace where he was held without bail for the next term of the supreme court that Rogers learned he was not alone burglar.

He must answer for, but murder, for one of the constables had been shot and killed. One of the yeggmen had also met death.

Two days had passed, two days in which Rogers had suffered all that of his sensitive nature can suffer during a first imprisonment and under such an awful charge, when his jailer announced a visitor. To his amazement and shame Beatrice Armstrong was ushered to his cell door.

"Oh, Malcolm," she cried, and Rogers saw that her eyes were red with weeping. "I had to come. I wanted to tell you that [—] that I—"

Then her voice caught. She dropped her head upon her arms clasped against the bars of the cell door and her form shuddered with sobs.

For an instant the prisoner forgot his part. His hand lightly touched her fair hair and in a voice of infinite tenderness he said: "Don't cry, dearest little girl, please don't cry. I know you are sorry for me because I—"

Then suddenly he remembered. He sprang back. "But—but I am a murderer—they say. What would Ormsby say if he knew you were here?"

"Ormsby!" cried Beatrice. "What do you mean?"

"Why, Ormsby, your betrothed."

"Jack Ormsby is nothing to me. Who said you were betrothed? I can't see that you ever loved me. I wonder why you did not speak, and then yesterday your letter came. I was so happy and then they told me what had happened the night before—but, oh, Malcolm! I don't believe it. I won't believe it. Tell me it isn't true. Let me help you."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."

But Rogers did not answer. He felt his heart grow heavy as lead. Like one in a stupor he muttered. "And—Ormsby told me—he let me think—I and I pledged my word—oh, God! what have I done? What have I done?"

In a flash of intuition Beatrice understood. There was utter joy in her voice as she cried: "Now I know; you thought it was Jack Ormsby who was threatening him. But he lied to you, so you need not keep your word. Tell me all about it and we can carry together to prove your innocence."