CHALLENGED TO THE PROOF. Mr. Aylesworth, whom the conservatives cordially hate, and largely because they fear him, has been ad dressing public meetings in the west Having received a big lot of Men's and giving evidence of that virility which he was said not to possess. It was only a day or two ago that the Toronto News bemoaned his tendency to condone the offences of the liberals and while credited with preaching a new liberalism, as distinct from the old liberalism, he was taking a stand which all good men must admire. Mr. Aylesworth is essentially a lawyer. "He has," says a critic, "a liberal and powerful mind, with unusual powers of exposition. He has high character and fine standing in an honourable profession." But he does not accept as true all that is said of his friends or the government of which he is a member and, therefore, he is "partizan." In his later addresses he has defined his position most clearly. "I defy any man," said he, "to establish by avidence any part of the charges hintservative platform speakers. I am not place the dismissal was slated and defending what is called 'graft.'
