MEDICAL SCIENCE IS UNABLE TO STOP ITS MARCH.

Million Lives Lost to Disease, Which Shows No Signs of Abatement—Decrease in Bombay District Offset by Heavy Increase in Bengal and the United Provinces—Soldiers in Good Health.

A blue book chronicling the progress and conditions of India during the last year has just been published. The most saddening section of the book is that which deals with India's peculiar scourge—the plague.

It appears to have been scarcely mentioned by the editors of modern medical science. Taking British India as a whole, the number of reported deaths from plague in 1906 was approximately the same as that of 1904—reaching nearly to the appalling total of 1,000,000.

In Bombay there was a marked abatement, the number of deaths from plague falling from 224,000 in 1905 to 120,000 in 1906. The central provinces and Madras were also comparatively free. The Punjab registered 334,500, as against 260,000 in 1905.

Deadly in Bengal.

But in Bengal and the united provinces the disease made great strides, the deaths reported from these provinces amounting to 125,000 and 360,000 respectively.

Since 1899 the deaths from plague have been almost continually on the increase. They amount from 130,000 to 28,000 in the year 1906, to rise again by leaps and bounds to their present figure.

Still, even in relation to this terrible scourge, there is a glimmer of light and much to be hoped for. The plague investigation council. The medical officers have made important experiments bearing on the relation of rat plague to human plague and the connection that rat fleas have with the spreading of human plague.

The general mortality of the vast peninsula would seem to be improving. The aggregate male population of the country has shown a decided shrinkage, from 69,438 in 1901, to 68,441 in 1905. The aggregate population has dropped in the same period from 91,615 to 246,817.

Soldiers Have Good Health.

The health of the European troops in India has been exceptionally good. The rate of admission to hospital of constantly sick, of mortality, and of invaliding all being the lowest on record. A similar record has been established by the native troops; the constantly sick rate, the death rate, and the invaliding rate were the lowest on record.

A low death rate is all the more noteworthy, as out of the total number (95) of deaths during the year 1905 occurred through the collapse of buildings at Dharmasala during the earthquake.

No special reference is made to the unrest. The spread of education is shown by the breaking down of the prejudice against teaching girls. Two women have taken degrees at Rangoon.

As to the native press, the tendency is lamented of catering to the public taste for extravagant fiction. One notable work has been "Palli Vinchigra," which reminds city dwellers of the charms of village life.

Riding On One Wheel.

Mr. Henry Tolecher is a native of Kingsbridge, Devonshire. At present he resides at Pretoria, in the Transvaal, and the submitted photograph represents a monochrome, for which he predicts a great future. He says that the new machine has many advantages over the two-wheeler for hill-climbing, speed, and can be fitted with free-wheel movement.

The novelty of the machine, he adds, is its simplicity. The handle bars are connected with the seat. By pressing the handles forward the seat goes back; by pressing the handles back the seat goes forward, causing an equilibrium that keeps the rider on the centre of gravity.

Monster Turtles.

The huge turtles that existed during the youth of the world appear to have inhabited the foothills of the Himalaya mountains. The shells and bones of these extinct creatures, which occasionally wash out of the ravines where they have been buried for ages, prove that they were more than twice as large as any specimen of the tortoise family which now exists.

Rev. Father Mochan, who left Canada a short time ago to assume charge of the parish of South Mountain, found the work too heavy for him, and he has been appointed curate at Belleville.

PEERESS IS PRESIDENT.

Duchess of Sutherland Head of Lady Automobiles in England.

Many English society women are becoming active automobilists, and a woman's automobile club has been established at Claridge's Hotel. The Duchess of Sutherland, one of the busiest as well as one of the handsomest of peeresses, finds time to act as president and to be a practical chauffeur.

Among other well-known women who drive their own machines are Lady Wimborne, the Baroness Campbell von Lauenro, Mrs. Edward Kennard, the novelist; the Countess of Rinnoll, Miss Dorothy Levitt, another member, is perhaps pioneer of motoring for women. She has taken part in important races, and knows what it is to be held up by the police for exceeding the speed limit.

Very few people who were present at the race quiet wedding of Miss Beatrice Knollys, a niece of Lord

DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND.

Knollys, King Edward's lifelong friend, and her sister, Mrs. George Wesley, realized the pathetic opposition to the marriage which had been offered by the Knollys family.

There was no question of criticism about the bridegroom, who is a popular and charming man of much culture, but, unhappily, he is British Consul at Archangel, that terrible position in Russia, where the Czar's unfortunate political offenders are compelled to live a life of absolute boredom through terrible winters. They are the best class of political prisoners, he was, and they are allowed much freedom, but theirs is the only society offered to Lady Wolsley after her life in England, and it was for this reason that the match was opposed.

King Edward, however, has the strongest sense of duty, and when the Knollys family tried to prevail with him to marry the man, she must share his responsibilities, as many royal women do. This was the King's advice to his own daughter, Maude, when she first objected to becoming Queen of Norway.

PUNTS VERSUS BATTLESHIPS.

Cornish Smuggler Made Successful Attack On Cruiser.

The action of the ballcock minister of the lonely Island of St. Kilda, who recently boarded a British cruiser at the head of a band of members of his flock, and endeavored to forcibly prevent her from carrying off as a prize a friendly trawler found fishing within prohibited waters, has had many parallels in the past.

One notorious case was that of a Cornish smuggler named Tabois, who, early in the last century, fought a boat's crew, who stormed a Government revenue cruiser off Falmouth. He had fitted up a complete battery of cannon in a cave used for storing contraband goods, and from these he returned the fire of the man-of-war with considerable effect, killing and wounding a number of her crew.

In revenge, her commander landed a boat's crew, who stormed the Government revenue cruiser off Falmouth. He had fitted up a complete battery of cannon in a cave used for storing contraband goods, and from these he returned the fire of the man-of-war with considerable effect, killing and wounding a number of her crew.

Far more remarkable, however, than even this dare-devil exploit, was the capture of the Spanish admiral's flagship in the West Indies by Peter (Pedro) Vello, afterwards nicknamed, on account of his achievement, "Peter the Great." The story is told in full in "History of the Buccaneers," and makes thrilling reading.

Peter had neither arms, money, nor even clothes to cover him. He was just an escaped slave, skulking naked in the forests of Hayti. Yet he managed to possess himself of an Indian sugar plantation, and in this, with a dozen more desperadoes, he built up a little empire, and a number of other articles of value.

BUYING OLD FIDDLES.

How Some Fine Instruments Have Been Picked Up Cheap.

Great numbers of fine old violins and violoncellos that came into the high-class market of London are produced through the medium of advertisements inserted in obscure country papers, and especially those of ancient cathedral cities.

Of course, few of the fiddles thus obtained are veritable masterpieces, but a great many of them are fine examples of early English and foreign makers, and they are often bought for ridiculously small prices by a group of experts, who have brought the business to a lucrative system. Many a struggling family of long descent in some out of the way part of the country happens to see in the one county newspaper of the week that good prices are given for old fiddles, and a some long forgotten instrument in a lumber room, or put away on a shelf, suddenly comes to mind.

Correspondence follows: the dealer sends a deposit in order that some fiddle spoken of may be sent to him and examined, and he usually replies that the instrument sent is disappointing and but so-called generally, but that he is willing to give 30s. or £2 for it. In a great many cases the offer is accepted off-hand, and in this way most of the finest fiddles extant of the second-class come into the hands of dealers. Only lately a fiddle that came from a Sirophshire farm at two guineas of £2 sold the same day to a West-end dealer for nearly £100.

One of the most shrewd and respected of these dealers, with until a year or two ago, a humble member of the orchestra of a London suburban theatre. He began to advertise in remote papers to the greatest limits of search, and in this way one of the most extensive and prosperous dealers in the trade.—London Tit-Bits.

Trees That Really Weep.

Among the historical curiosities to be seen at Chatsworth House, the residence of the Duke of Devonshire, is a willow tree that weeps very often to the personal discomfort of those beyond it.

To the casual observer it appears just an ordinary willow, but on closer inspection it is seen to be artfully artificial. It is made from a metal to closely resemble a living tree, and each of its branches is covered with innumerable holes. In fact, the whole tree is a monster syringe, being connected to a water main near by.

The key for turning on and off is close at hand, and may be a visiting party has been enticed beneath its branches by practical jokers.—Tit-Bits.

Historic Key Sold.

At an auction sale of Worthing a handsomely wrought steel key, with a monogram forming the words "Maria Regina," which belonged to Mary Queen of Scots, and was used by her to open the Earl of Arundel's private room in Edinburgh Castle, was secured for $250 by a London bidder.

Imposing Memorial Erected At Dingwall to Famous Soldier.

This magnificent memorial at Dingwall, Ross-shire, which is the outcome of an appeal initiated by the Old Macdonald Society in Glasgow, and responded to from all quarters of the globe, was opened recently by the Marquis of Tullibardine, M.P., D.S.O.

The memorial takes the form of an imposing tower in the old Scottish baronial style of architecture, with a height and 350ft. above the sea level.

MACDONALD MEMORIAL.

It forms a conspicuous landmark, while the view from the top-most balcony, which embraces half a dozen of the Northern counties, affords a panorama of rare beauty and grandeur, the most interesting point in the landscape being the birthplace of the famous soldier.

The memorial, which was designed by Mr. J. Sandford Kay, architect, Glasgow, was selected from over 160 competitive plans.
