BOTTLING THEIR FERVOUR.

John Lewis, of the Toronto Star, the biographer of Hon. George Brown, comments upon the indifference with which Canada's national holiday (July 1st) is celebrated. "Canadian," said he, "will let off fireworks on the birthday of the queen, march in procession on the day of St. Jean Baptiste, or the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, while the birthday of the dominion, though set apart for rest and pleasure, passes by as if it were not a landmark in the history of the nation."

The cause is not far to seek. Canada has too many days on which some kind of festivity is expected, too many anniversaries on which divisions of the people—English, Irish, Scottish, and French—have demonstrations of a more or less patriotic character. The Americans (or the people of the United States, to distinguish them from the people who occupy the larger half of North America) have but one day. It bulks largely in their estimation. This is Independence Day, and they make noise enough on it, and damage enough to life and limb, to satisfy them for the rest of the year.

MR. BORDEN IN PERIL.

It is rumored that Sir William Van Horne has been asked to lead the conservative party in the commons and has asked for time to consider the matter. Sir William is a man of great vigour, and has made a "go" of whatever he has put his hand to. He is, moreover, peculiarly versatile. Though, technically a railroad man, and a good one, having during his management of the Canadian Pacific given evidence of his skill and acumen and clear-headedness, he is credited with many accomplishments. Whether he is a politician has to be shown. A railway manager has to be politic all the while, and has to exercise his ministrations upon the government of the day, regardless of its party leanings. Whether he can manage men in parliament, has to be proven. Mr. Borden was supposed to be the ideal leader, but he has not the prestige of a Sir John Macdonald, and cannot do as he thinks best with the sure and certain conviction that he will be obeyed.

He is suffering as all men do who fall. He had one great opportunity to lead the people, and missed the mark. He may not have been to blame. He came out at the last minute for public ownership in railways, but he did not have his party with him, nor has he it with him on this subject yet. Would any other man have greater luck with the party constituted as at present and loaded with leaders who cannot lead and will not follow?

The merit of a Van Horne is that he would try leadership by command. But how is he going to succeed Borden? Who are the conspirators who presume to dismiss him and call another to the office he holds?

CITY COUNCIL IS HELPLESS.

The corporation of Toronto has been literally sandbagged into silence. It thought it had a great contract with the street railway company, to which it leased the plant it had acquired, and the agreement ought to have been perfect, so far as human knowledge went, because it was drafted by some of the best men in the legal profession.

But it turns out that the instrument which was regarded as so complete and complete is, like the legislative creations in the time of O'Connell, so faulty that, metaphorically speaking, a coach and four can be driven through it. The city council, of Toronto, has been suffering a series of defeats, at the hands of the company, and through the highest court in the realm, the privy council. The decision of some time ago, that it was for the company and not the city or its officials to determine on what streets the cars should run, was a staggerer. It came, too, after the somewhat boyish prank of the controllers in pulling up a piece of track which the company had laid near to a summer resort.

The ruling of the court took the ginger out of the controllers and they meekly submitted to the proceeding of authorizing what they had objected to. But they asked the lords of the privy council to be a little more explicit and say just what they meant by this judgment, and the lords have replied that what they have said they have said, and that it does not require illumination.

WILL BE TROUBLE.

Revolution May Be Russia's Next Step. The Hague, July 6.—Felix Moscheles, chairman of the International Arbitration and Peace Association, speaking of the grave situation in Russia, said to-day: "I can quite imagine that the dissolution of the domain will give great satisfaction to a great number of people. The ordinary patriotic Russian people, and in his support, as the Englishman, and a great many of them are steeped in the belief that realising ultra-conservatism are the one thing necessary in government."

"From the first moment I heard about the threat I felt that the domain could do nothing else but refuse. And what is going to happen next? I am in touch with a good many Russians here, and I have come to the conclusion that nobody knows. They are very divided in their opinions as to the ripeness of the situation in Russia. Some of them say it is none too soon to take the final step; others believe that it is better to play a waiting game."

"I remember one day asking Maxim, whose friendship I was privileged to have, what he had been doing. 'Je conspire,' he replied. 'And as then France and Italy were hampered by secret societies, so now Russia is hampered by revolutionary groups. It would be folly to try to predict whether they will find a Napoleon to lead them, or, indeed, what direction the movement will take.'

A MYSTERIOUS CRIME.

Shot By Stranger She Refused To Marry. Geneva, July 6.—Mlle. Preda, the daughter of a wealthy Swiss painter, was yesterday shot by a man named Joseph Vignano, twenty-three years of age, who was unknown to her.

She was walking in a wood above the little town of Davos, when Vignano met her, and, pointing a revolver at her, demanded that she should promise to marry him.

She politely declined, whereupon the man fired at her several times, and then, with the sixth shot, blew out his own brains.

Mlle. Preda, who was found some time later, lying helpless near the dead body of the man, had been struck by three bullets, none of which, however, had injured a vital part. She is expected to recover.

At Narrows-On-The-Rideau. Narrows-on-the-Rideau, July 5.—A great many from here took in the excursion to Ogdensburg yesterday. John H. McCann lost $35 at the circus in Brockville last week. James Mooney, in the Rathbun's employment at Deseronto, visited his former home here this week. M. Ryan bought a large quantity of wood from E. J. Grennon, on the lower Rideau, last week, with which to burn his brick kiln, in Smith's Falls. Business is very brisk on the canal at present.

"Barney" McGlade, who has been in Mr. Grennon's employment, in his lumber camp, on the north shore, is now with Mr. Dolan, helping put in the new sidewalks in Newboro. John Murphy, of Burgess, has now got full control. Visitors: Miss Ella Bolton, Newboro, and Miss Mary Thompson, Chicago, and Miss Katie Mooney, Narrows, at Mr. Grennon's. Mr. O'Reilly, Bedford, at P.
