BASS GAMEST OF FISH

A VETERAN ANGLER TALKS ABOUT THEM

Traveller Had Seen Some, Too—The Man That Talked Says That Found For Found the Bass Will Fight Best of Any.

Lachine, Que., July 2.—"I am not at all afraid of being successfully contradicted when I say that pound for pound no fish that swims has more pluck, endurance and agility than these same black bass." The speaker had fished for mahseer in India, for tunny in the Gulf of California, for salmon in Norway and for trout over half the world. He had heard of the black bass of North America as a coarse heavy fighter, a near relative of the European perch and as being essentially a bait fisherman's fish. Even on this side he had been assured by good authorities that there was not much sense in casting for bass. There are still to be found anglers of experience who have not yet discovered that the bass is a surface feeder well worth the attention of the fly fisher.

"I remember playing one of the anadromous perch of the Ganges for a good fifteen minutes one scorching hot day," went on the traveller. "He was a big fellow, really a king of a bass, fully four feet long, lusty and strong, being just up from the sea. It was a great fight, for the tackle was light, the rod only a pound in weight. "There was extraneous excitement, too. A number of bathers of both sexes were in the water just where I was playing my fish, attracted, I expect, by the unusual and probably unwelcome spectacle of a European fishing in their sacred river. It was an awkward business for me. The fish did not appear to mind the bathers a bit. Once or twice he twisted my line around them and I came near to having a smash. "But his fighting was all down under water. It was just an angler's heavy kind of a darting about, with an occasional savage jerk. When he came to the top it was to make submission, and confession of defeat, not to fight. "The nearest thing to the bass as a fighter which I know of is the Murray river cod, something like a bass, and a member of the same family. You find him in the big rivers of southern Australia. But there is not much fun about that fishing, as you have to bait heavily with raw meat and use a kind of a two hand salmon rod of the heaviest make. A fish of twenty-five pounds will put up quite a pretty fight and will keep it up for a long time, but it is not the quick, fierce scrambling sort of a fight that we had with our six-pound fellow to-day. The fish referred to had taken thirty minutes to fight and then, being touched with the rim of the net, went off and with renewed vigor fought for twenty minutes more. Early a third of the time had been spent on top of the water, leaping, swirling around or lashing out with tail and fins. There was absolutely no kick left in him when at last he was hauled alongside.

"I got a fine specimen of a kind of black bass in the Malay Archipelago. It weighed twelve pounds and fought as well on top of the water, yet with none of the tense rigidity of body and acrobatic somersaulting of your fish. But he really never fought out his game, for as is the custom there my attention divided under the fish when he was in one of his flurries and coming up from below clasped him with one hand and stuck his tail between his teeth. It was effective retrieving, but a very little of it was enough for me.

"One thing I noticed to-day which agrees with what I have noted respecting fishes of this family in other lands, is their habit of following the flies along the top before taking them. Several times I watched quite a procession of the bass swimming along behind the cast, with eyes fixed eagerly upon the flies, until one of them rushed forward and caught on.

"You do not catch the trout at that kind of anticipatory following after. From somewhere down below the spotted fellows catch sight of the lures and with minds made up, rush to the top and suck them in without deliberation. It bespeaks a difference in the mentality of the two types, I suppose. The sea bass of the Pacific coral islands, great fellows running into the hundred-weights, will follow on for sometimes hours at a time before the rush at and fight for the bait.

"It was there I first noticed the chameleon-like habit of the bass in changing his skin coloring to suit his environment. If you examine the string of them of a bright green with yellow underneath. Those are the fish we got in the blue waters, on the sandy shallows. The dark black ones with the muddy colored sides we took over the dark looking weedy places.

"In the South Pacific I have caught bass almost pink on the belly where the pink coral abounds. Near by, where the prevailing color of the reefs is white, they have backs of emerald green, shading to silvery white. Why they should have this curious faculty it is hard to say, since nature has armed them with powerful muscles, a strong jaw and given them ample protection against predatory foes.

"It may be that the bass are intended to prey upon fish swifter in the water than they are, such as the trout and the whitefish, so that partial invisibility is necessary to them, though somehow wherever I have met with them the bass never seemed to me sneaking things which got their living by fraud. The writer remarked upon the boldness of our black bass in the springtime, when the old males are guarding their young. If a fish spear is thrust into the water near them they will actually seize the prongs and violently wrench it with quite surprising strength. One would hardly expect such pugnacity and crafty lying in wait for prey in the same fish. "Did you ever hear of bass attacking men?" the other asked. "There is a fish commonly found about Aden which makes serious attacks upon bathers. It is a true bass of a dark color with ugly teeth and spiny fins, and the British soldiers quartered there are regularly warned to look out for him. They are quite fierce in their rushes and no one ever pretends to offer battle when they appear among the swimmers in the surf. Even trained soldiers beat a retreat when a drove of them puts in an appearance.

CHURCH SENSATION. Wrote the Word Ichabod Over Entrance.

A recent church sensation of London was the sight of the word 'Ichabod' in glaring letters over the portico of the City Temple. Two well-dressed men were seen at work on the letters early that morning; nobody interfered with them, it being assumed that they were orthodox Christians, who, saddened by

Rev. R. J. Campbell's heresy, conceived it to be their duty to fulfil the invocation of the late pastor of the church, Dr. Parker. He, on a memorable occasion, declaimed from the pulpit of the Temple: "Should it ever come to pass that the great truths of Christ's death and resurrection be denied by any future occupier of this pulpit, or should the fact of his gracious Godhead and divinity be questioned may the word Ichabod be written over the doors of the City Temple."

SUNSHINE FURNACE

on the Sunshine furnace provide an opening deep and wide enough to admit great rough chunks of wood that would either have to be wasted, or chopped up, for an ordinary furnace.

As for putting coal in the Sunshine, why, it's the easiest thing imaginable!

Such a generous opening would be next to impossible to miss. And you can easily deposit the coal in any spot you desire.

After you have experimented with small feed-doors, and hit the edge of the door frame a few times, you will recognize more completely the ease and advantage of the Sunshine method. The illustrations hint at the difference.

If you will examine the fire-pot of the Sunshine you will notice that the sides are straight up and down. On many furnaces the fire-pots slope, forming a rest on which the ashes accumulate.

As ashes are non-conductors of heat they prevent the fire-pot from radiating as much heat as it should; they, clog up the draft and deaden the fire.

But the Sunshine fire-pot is a wonderful radiator of heat. No ashes can cling to the straight, sheer sides of its fire-pot. The live, red-hot coals are always snug up to them. There is nothing to prevent the radiation of every unit of heat produced by the fuel.

The Sunshine is the most scientifically and perfectly constructed furnace. It radiates most heat with less consumption of fuel. It is the easiest-managed, cleanest, greatest labor and fuel economizer you can buy.

If your local dealer does not handle the Sunshine, write direct to us for Free Booklet.
