CRESCENT THE WINNER

KINGSTON'S KATHLEEN AGAIN DEFEATED

A Fine Race Witnessed To-Day—The Margin Was Small—The Boats Are About Equal.

The second of the races between the Crescent, of Watertown, N.Y., and the Kathleen, of Kingston, under auspices of the Eastern Yacht Racing Circuit of Lake Ontario, took place this morning. There was a large crowd at the yacht club house, and many watched the interesting contest from Macdonald Park. There was a splendid breeze from the north-west that gave delight to the yachtsmen. Skipper Strange had the Kathleen out early to see how the sail changes affected her, and the result seemed satisfactory.

The race was twelve miles, twice over a triangular course, beginning at the yacht club house buoy, thence to the Channel Grove buoy, thence to the asylum buoy, and home. J. M. Campbell, commodore of the Kingston club; H. P. Smith, secretary of the racing circuit, and Dr. Borden, of Watertown, N.Y., were judges.

The Crescent, sailed by George Reeves, commodore of the Watertown club, moved out from the yacht club slip, shortly before the first gun. She is of a decidedly pretty model, and, if anything, a little more graceful than the Kingston boat. W. Harty, Jr., and James Jaquith, again composed Col. Strange's crew.

At 10.30 o'clock the signal gun was fired, and for the remaining five minutes the two yachts hovered above the buoy. The Kathleen was very cleverly manoeuvred, and when the starting gun was fired, at 11.35, she was almost at the buoy, and crossed the line eight seconds ahead of the Crescent. For half the distance to the Channel Grove buoy, the two boats kept on equal terms. Crescent was to windward, but didn't affect her rival to any extent. The two skippers resorted to jockeying, and then Kathleen slipped under the Crescent's stern and took the windward position. The jockeying took place for the rest of the distance on this leg. The Crescent, however, gained a little, and rounded the first buoy a couple of lengths ahead of the Kathleen.

Then followed a nice tack with the boats fairly even, though the Kathleen seemed to be pointing higher, while the Yankee fell away. Soon the latter came about but the Kingston boat held on a while longer and when they reached up the lake a goodly space of open water separated the two yachts. On this tack the Kathleen had the best of the argument and seemed to pick up considerably. Skipper Strange came about on the next tack first, but the Crescent followed his move almost immediately. This proved a great run. The American was to windward, but the Kathleen outfooted him completely. Skipper Strange and his crew took everything out of their boat and never a luff did he make, but held right on, while his opponent luffed every little while. It was a beautiful run, and when they came about once more it was anybody's race.

This seemmed to be the leg that counted for Strange could beat Reeves on the run home. Once more they came about with the Kathleen going well, and a good lead to her credit, though slightly to leaward. The home crew were not sparing themselves but taking everything they could out of their boat. The same might be said of the next run toward the asylum buoy. It was a magnificent contest, but the Kathleen was outfooting her rival and not losing an ounce of wind. The Crescent seemed to do better, however, and the local crew came about fresh. A minute later the Yankee came about, too. Scarcely had he done so, however, than the Canuck skipper tacked again. Into the wind he went, taking every bit he could get. So they held on to the buoy, which was rounded by the Kathleen first, and twelve seconds later by the Crescent. It was then for the run home, the Kathleen carrying a balloon jib and the Crescent her mainsail and ordinary jib.

A Great Race.

Another race like it cannot be hoped for. It was beyond description. When, finally the Kathleen rounded the buoy ten seconds in the lead a burst of pent-up enthusiasm burst from the eagerly watching crowd. But it was only the first round, and the boats about where they started.

A nice stretch followed to the Simcoe Island buoy, the Crescent pointing to windward of her rival and rounding it nicely in the lead. The next reach should have put Kathleen in the lead, but instead disappointment followed for the local yachts followers. Both skippers held in one long stretch toward Macdonald Park. Then the Crescent came about. The gallery at the yacht club expected to see their favorite hang on till in close to land and then sneak up with the wind. But Col. Strange thaught it better to follow the leader's move apparently. He came about, lost the wind, and the race was practically at an end, for by the time he recovered from his troubles the Crescent's lead could not be pulled down, though to the next buoy and on the home stretch the Canuck fought gamely.

It looked as though there would yet be a close finish, as the Kathleen came tearing along under all sail. A couple of hundred yards from the buoy, however, her balloon jib went into the water and the race was lost by a minute. With it goes the cup.

The Sumary.

Home buoy:
Kathleen 12.14.12
Crescent 12.14.20
Second round finished:
Crescent 1.09.25
Kathleen 1.10.35

In windward work the Kathleen showed up particularly. On the free run, the Crescent was a little better. After a week or two working out, the Kathleen will prove herself a better boat.

The festival for the children of the House of Providence usually held on St. James day, was postponed, this year, and occurs on Wednesday next.

THE CASE SETTLED

And the Facts Did Not Get An Airing.

An assault case, in which Barriefield people were connected, was on the docket at the police court, on Saturday morning, but just as the magistrate was about to hear the case, it came to an end, a settlement being made between the parties. The feature of the proceedings was the warm remarks made by Magistrate Farrell, in regard to cases in which Barriefield people were concerned, his worship stating that some of the villagers were always going around with a chip on their shoulder, endeavoring to have their neighbor up for assault or for using abusive language. A half dozen or more women were on hand to give evidence in the case.

The case was one arising out of a row which took place in Barriefield on June 29th. James Esford and Mrs. Corkey are neighbors. Mrs. Corkey is seventy years of age, but Mr. Esford is a middle-aged man. According to all accounts, there was a neighbor's fight on the day mentioned, between them. Had the case been aired in police court the full facts could have been ascertained, but as such was not the case, just what kind of weapons were used in this battle, is not known as "mum" was the word with both parties after the settlement had been made. However, it is learned that as a result, the woman was confined to her bed for two weeks, suffering from a fractured rib and other minor injuries. She was attended by Dr. Hanley, and the latter was present in court to-day.

Esford agreed to pay $12 doctor's fees. The woman did not want to have the case settled in this way, and wanted the magistrate to hear her story. However, she was persuaded, by her counsel, to let the case drop.

"I don't know what is the matter with some of the people in Barriefield," said the magistrate. "Some of them appear to be going around with a chip on their shoulder all the time, looking for a fight. Of all the complaints of this kind received, the majority of them come from Barriefield. As far as I can gather, in this case, there is a great deal of blame on both sides. If, instead of quarrelling, the Barriefield people would endeavor to pass by some of their own failings, they would get along better. The next case that comes to this court from Barriefield will have to be tried to a finish. If this case had gone on, there would have been a nice sum in witnesses' fees for some one to face.

"If you want to have these fights," concluded his worship, "we will make it worth your while."

Mrs. Esford, wife of the defendant, walked over to the reporters' table, and shaking her umbrella in the faces of the scribes, demanded that the "names" in the case be kept out of the papers. The reporters, however, could make no such promises, and the lady was not in a very good frame of mind when she left the police court.
