IT IS ONLY A STEP FROM ROMANCE TO DISILLUSIONMENT.

Some of the Things That Have Caused Love to Flit Out of the Window—True Love Never Runs Smoothly.

How said it is when poor Love flits out of the window! Among your friends, perhaps, you have seen the small girl in a hat take up his little portmanteau and leave.

Or, sadder yet was the estrangement of two ideal lovers. Miffed at some slight indiscretion on the part of her lover, the fair one either opened her eyes and points outward in disdain, or else calls papa. And it's all off.

But more tragic still is it when the ungalant lover fails to turn up at the appointed hour when he wears the blushing maiden, crowned with orange blossoms, waiting at the portals of the church. How the fair gods must weep!

There are many old saws about love. One is that "it is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all."

Another is that "true love never runs smoothly." When he comes to the point of no doubt, swift currents in the river of passion are inevitable, but how many go down in their frail craft and never rise again! Love's life opens, too, as usually found to be weighted with lead.

When Mrs. Augustus I. Post, wife of a New York banker and millionaire, appeared in court to testify to alleged cruelty on the part of her husband she declared that she wished she had never met him, for, when she signed, she would never have loved him.

Mr. Post, 32 years of age, Mrs. Post blushingly confessed to 60. Mr. Post is said to have murmured something about May mating with December. It was all very lovely, that courtship eight years ago. He called her his "romance." "It is sweet to recall how tender and kind he was to me," she said.

"Ah! happy were the days when he looked at me with the ardor of an ardent lover in the Waldorf-Astoria; nothing I wanted was refused. "I knew I was older than Mr. Post, but now I wish I were still older, twenty years older; then I might have known better than to have fallen in love."

Perhaps there is some consolation, after all, perhaps many unpleasantnesses are avoided, by being left in the lurch at the church. In Richmond, Va., there was no more devoted lover than Frank Tucker. He was only 19, but ardent beyond all measure. Minnie Striptie was his "colleen bawn," and was at the altar as a girl of 16. Other girls sighed when they thought of this happy marriage.

The wedding was arranged. The bride's home on the happy day was bedecked with flowers. The bride, radiant and lovely, assumed a filmy veil and carried a bouquet of wild-rose-valley flowers so significant of love. To the strains of "Lohengrin," played on the family organ, she descended to the parlor. The guests had gathered, they looked anxiously one to the other. The bridegroom had not arrived.

The bride waited—waited until ten o'clock, an entire hour. Then the truth dawned upon them—the bridegroom would not appear. So the guests went home; the bride that was to have been wed tearfully to bed.

It was asserted later that the failure of the bridegroom to appear was involuntary. His mother objected to the proposed marriage, and it is said that upon the wedding evening the bridegroom hid in his room, where he was kept a prisoner.

On a cold, brisk day some months ago a white-gowned figure waited in the vestibule of Grace Lutheran church, Macungie, Pa. The figure was Miss Eva V. Barto. She was surrounded by friends, who had come to witness her marriage to Wm. Trexler, of Albion, a neighboring town.

But the bride waited in vain. The man failed to appear. Miss Barto did not wait long, but in a few minutes she was surrounded by a party of friends, who had come to witness her marriage to Wm. Trexler for $5,000 damages for breach of promise.

At how much in mere money does a woman value her heart? The price seems to vary. Miss Gertrude Deming, of Nanstons, Pa., asserted in court that when her wedding day approached the love of William Wannamaker, her fiancé, grew cold; and when she, the young woman shivered as she told of the sudden frigidity of his affection. And after she had recounted her sufferings and told how her heart was shattered she asked $25,000 as a claim for the cruel wrongs.

Miss Deming said she was 25 and her lover 20. So intense was his desire to win her favor, that when she, the bride, began courting her he paid two men to hold them up while they were on an evening walk so that he could gallantly attack and put them to rout. Of course, it was only later that she learned of the hoax, and at the time thought Wannamaker was just "grand."

But of all the tragedies of love, what is more cruel than to be parted at the altar? What is more dramatic, what nearer filled with the high notes of despair? Miss Mary Moore, daughter of Edward E. Moore, a wealthy Brooklyn business man, was wedded to the young man in St. Augustine's Catholic church, New York. Miss Moore had met her young man about three months before. He was introduced to her as a promising young lawyer.

The wedding was a fashionable event; the church was filled with guests. During the ceremony an unknown man entered the church. He followed the couple to the bride's home, where there was a splendid reception. In the midst of the festivities the unknown man appeared before the bridegroom, declared him to be a prodigal nephew, discarded by his family, and denounced him as an impostor and a criminal. The bridegroom is said to have confessed. He fled from the house. After that the bride never saw him, and a short time ago Judge Burr annulled the marriage.

At Simmenthal, in Switzerland, not long ago, a young couple were to be married. Arrived in her bridal robes, the bride, accompanied by the bridegroom, walked to church, where the guests had already assembled. On the way the bridegroom slipped on the ice and fell sprawling. The bride, however, did not seem to be hurt. The bridegroom arose, his face red with anger, and said he would not marry so unsympathetic a woman. He betook him-

GRUESOME STORY THE GHOST WITH THE "SCREAMING SKULL"

Authentic Legend of Boynton Hall, England—Sister's Dying Request Disregarded—Weird Sounds.

The Screaming Skull of Boynton Hall, the seat of the Boynton family, is one of the weirdest of the many weird and fascinating old legends that are told of the famous houses of Britain. An account, authenticated by Sir Griffith Boynton, the present head of the family, published in Pearson's Magazine.

The story goes that in her dying moments a certain Anne Griffith made her sisters promise that her head should be buried in the family mansion, but that after her death this was looked on as a mere dying fancy, and the promise disregarded.

There comes the weird part of the legend: "About a week after the funeral, on the same night of the week as that on which Anne died, just as the inmates of the house were retiring to bed, they were startled by a loud crash in one of the upstairs rooms. Concluding that a picture or some furniture had fallen, two men-servants went to the room to find out the cause of the noise, everything was quite undisturbed. Full of anxious fear, the family kept vigil; but the night wore on without any further sounds, and the next morning they were startled by a loud crash in one of the upstairs rooms. Concluding that a picture or some furniture had fallen, two men-servants went to the room to find out the cause of the noise, everything was quite undisturbed.
