KINGSTON, THE CITY OF THE DEAD.

(We mean Kingston, Jamaica), but Kingston, Canada, is practically dead, as far as push and energy is concerned. Twenty thousand people when it should be a hundred, with all its natural advantages, but contracted officials, who make by-laws to thwart the best interest of the ratepayers, with their brains in their pockets, and their hearts in their purses, pay them decently, bury the dead men, give everyone who comes to your city, on the market or elsewhere, who are willing to pay for the privilege, a chance to do business without fear or favor.

Then a blessing will come in the end of a curse, and EDWARD'S NERVEINE will have a sale it never had before. Gibson's Red Cross Drug Store and at all Drug stores, or direct from the EDWARDS' Medical Co., London.

ADVICE TO FARMERS

TOLD BY LIEUT.-GOV. CHANLER TO GET TOGETHER

Co-operation Declared to Be Their Safety From Unscrupulous Speculators—Grange Day at Thousand Island Park.

Thousand Island Park, N.Y., Aug. 12.—Advocating co-operation and unionization among farmers as the best means of fighting unscrupulous speculators, Lieutenant-Governor Chanler, this afternoon, spoke before several hundred farmers of Northern and Central New York, assembled here at the annual state Grange day. For a half hour he spoke from the platform at the Taboracle, his address holding the attention of everyone in the vast building. Politics, except in a general sort of way, did not enter into his address, all the speeches being along other than political lines.

Previous to the address of Mr. Chanler, Frank M. Godfrey, master of the New York state Grange, responded to the address of welcome delivered by Rev. J. D. Phelps, Hon. J. O. Hadley, master of the New Hampshire State Grange, also spoke.

While today's gathering has been surpassed in previous years so far as numbers go, there seemed to be a greater interest in the addresses and exercises than in past years, and the crowds wandered about in preference to spending the afternoon at the Taboracle.

The weather was perfect. A conservative estimate placed the crowd at 3,000. Many of the visitors arrived on last night's boat and will enjoy a three days' vacation at the islands. The bulk of the crowd arrived during the morning hours, every boat carrying the limit. In the early part of the afternoon the Watertown band arrived and enlivened things, and later the drum corps of company H of Rockport, from the camp at Fisher's Landing and a parade was held, the two baseball clubs marching with the bands at their head.

Lieutenant-Governor Chanler's address follows in part:

The relation of the farmer to the state is the subject upon which I shall speak to-day. It is a subject which includes all who gain a livelihood by cultivating the land on a larger scale than is made use of by the man who has a truck garden near a town. Twenty acres of land, 100 or 250 acres or more is a farmer from the point of view I take to-day, whether he raises hogs, fruit, crops, cattle or sheep or milk or any combination of these natural products, by care or cultivation become the profit of man at the hand of nature and find their source of being either in the soil or from it.

We are, as a nation, commercial, mechanical and agricultural. Our nation, in a commercial and agricultural way, may be divided into two parts. Those who live by developing nature and those who make fortunes by speculating in nature's annual development or by manufacturing nature's products into commercial commodities needed by the world at large. It is right that the man who spends his life in drawing from the substance of the soil by hard and unremitting labor those products of nature which are the natural development or vegetable growth that are, after all, the necessities of life; it is right that the reward for this toil should depend in any part upon the speculation of men who never saw a farm except through the window of a train and to whom the seasons mean little more than heat and cold, light and darkness.

The products of the soil are the basis upon which is built the foundation of human existence. Human existence alone renders possible commercial and national progress. Why, then, should our wonderful increase along these lines leave far behind, if not entirely ignore, the basis of our existence, the corner stone of our development and the keystone of our national and international success?

I do not pretend to be a practical farmer. I have never really worked for a whole year in the field, plowing, sowing, reaping or stacking. I have, however, lived on and taken part in the work of a farm from the time I was six years of age until I was twenty-two. In that time I can speak with some personal knowledge of the trials and the hardships and the feeling triumphs of a farmer's life. And I may say this: The trials and the hardships are done at hand and the triumphs and rewards are also always fleeting by.

This is an age of centralization and of co-operation. The farmers must centralize their power by means of organization if they are to hold their own. This is an age of organization and unions. The farmers must organize and form stronger unions or remain the prey of the unscrupulous speculator. The man who, before Thanksgiving Day, buys up your turkeys on your place, in the fall, speculates on your profits, yet unpicked, is but the feeble imitator of the man who makes millions out of the best trust and makes or loses a fortune in the daily fluctuations in the price of wheat. And all the time the farmer does the work and the man who never worked

Unitarian. REV. C. W. CASSON, OTTAWA.

Religious Sanity. It is quite possible that many people in their religion are not quite sane. However rational they may be in all other realms of thought and endeavor, if they do not adopt in religion the rational principle in religion they cannot be considered as religiously sane. Sanity consists in the use of the rational faculty. Who ever does not yield to its fullest authority is not adopting the principle that makes for sanity. The Unitarian church, standing as it does, for a rational method, is conducive to religious sanity.
