BELFAST BEING RUINED

All Branches of Business Have Been Injurious Affected.

Belfast, Aug. 24.—A prominent manufacturer told me to-day that it will take years for Belfast to recover the trade lost since the strike began. All branches of business have been affected, and some of the most important industries of the Ulster capital will be crippled.

The milling industry has been at a standstill since the July holidays, and the price of flour must inevitably increase. Most of the grain comes from America, Canada and Australia, a small proportion from Liverpool, and the bulk of it is dealt with for supply to Ireland.

But supplies are being exhausted. Three large ships, with full cargoes of grain, are lying in the harbor, unable to discharge. In consequence of the congestion the Liverpool stores are congested, and further orders for Belfast flour cannot be received. American and Scotch millers are already profiting by the helplessness of their Ulster competitors, and shipping flour to the north of Ireland.

Even now there is a shortage of good flour in Belfast, and the bakers are being forced to resort to inferior quality for bread. Moreover, freights have risen on shipments via Dublin, so that the local congestion cannot be relieved in that way. Various foodstuffs are affected; for example, the price of linsed cake has risen £2 a ton.

No one believes that there will actually be a bread famine in Belfast, but the millers have undoubtedly suffered heavy loss through the complete paralysis of the dockers and carters' services. Extraordinary efforts have been made to secure supplies, but, as I write, they have been unable to reach any arrangement for unloading the grain ships accumulating in the port.

Exports as well as imports are held up. The great linen houses have difficulty in filling orders, and in this connection America suffers especially. One of the largest firms, driven to desperation by their inability to ship goods, finally despatched sixty-one cases to New York by cartage, and then through the streets in the middle of the night. The head of the firm rode on the motor-lorry himself, and the strike pickets being ignorant of the goods were smuggled away safely.

Another firm tried the same method and succeeded in making one shipment, but a second attempt was accidentally delayed until daylight, when the pickets came on duty. But for the prompt retreat of the lorry, it would have been captured, and the contents destroyed.

The linen trade is also suffering from the lack of raw materials and accessories usually imported from Lancashire. Thousands of pounds worth of supplies have been damaged on the quays, where incoming shipments are piled high in hopeless confusion. Pockets of goods are temporarily transformed into carters' tumble the packing-cases along, intent on securing what belongs to their firm, and caring nothing for the rest.

Most of the cartage to and from the linen houses has been in the hands of contractors, and the men who supplanted them have been subjected to continual groans and abuse as they drive through the busy streets in semi-state, with their uniformed escort. It is most pathetic to see a mild, middle-aged accountant, bespectacled and quite harmless, sitting in a van in an obviously apologetic attitude, and gazing with mute appeal at several hundred callous and rather grimy strikers, who bombard him with quayside epithets, and even in which to spend one's holiday, but from indications it is about all the holiday the majority of the Belfast clerks will get this summer. Employers are in no mood to discuss pleasurable jaunts.

Belfast is the great centre of the mercantile water industry, the peculiar quality of the water making it especially suitable for this purpose. Like other industries this is suffering from congestion of raw material here, but extreme difficulty is experienced in making shipments promptly, and even greater difficulty in securing returned "empties" from England.

Thirsty Blackpool is in a terrible state because of the threatened interference with its supply of holiday refreshment. Tens of thousands of empty bottles are accumulating on that side of the channel because the striking carters will not allow them to be delivered here. Frantic and somewhat abusive appeals for assistance are received here daily from Blackpool landladies, who wish to know whether the stock of ginger beer is going to hold out, and if not, will they please say so and be done with it.

This is also the headquarters for the rope-making industry. Most of the cord used in the self-propelled machinery for harvesting comes from Belfast. The harvest season is at hand, and orders for rope remain unfilled. One manufacturer who had 100 tons accumulated for harvest orders hired the conventional motor-lorry and took it to the docks himself at the risk of having both lorry and rope destroyed by pickets.

"It might as well be burned in the street as rot in the warehouse," he said to a more cautious merchant who criticized his daring.

The ironmaking and engineering industries are completely paralyzed. I will give one example. Messrs. Combe & Barber, one of the largest iron foundries and machine makers in Belfast, have been closed since July. Belfast, have been closed since July. Belfast, have been closed since July. Belfast, have been closed since July.

GRAFTS OF MEAN PEOPLE.

Some Manage to Live Without Working.

It is really astonishing what a large number of people there are who will take infinite pains to avoid work. And the queer part of it is that they really give themselves much trouble in their attempts to obtain a living without laboring at any fixed task.

Not long ago a novel trick was practised by a man going about the streets of London, but it seems impossible to think that he made much out of it unless there are an abnormal number of exceedingly foolish people in existence. Passing a man casually, he would glance at his back and say, "Beg your pardon, sir, but there's a lot of white stuff on your shoulders." Those who were particular about their personal appearance would thank the man and ask him to wipe it off, accompanying the request with a tip. Of course, it is unnecessary to say that there never was anything white on the back of the man addressed, and that it was he who was wiping it off. The man took an interest in the stranger's toilet.

A much more lucrative trick was reported some time ago. According to this statement, a well-dressed gentleman sauntered about the streets of Sydney, every now and then in the posture of a New South Wales, stopping a man who had him fill his pipe and he would ask him for a "fill" of tobacco as he had left his pouch at home. Not many smokers would refuse such a request when made by a respectable man, and would by a generous stranger would be obliged to oblige him. The man would then take the pouch he carried. When he had collected a pound or two he would sell it to a tobacconist.

Another dodge worked on likely-looking gentlemen is that well-worn device which might be termed the "trick pipe fake." As the victim hurries along a crowded street he notices a man who is smoking a big meerschaum pipe. That is to say, he would notice him if he were looking, but as he is in a hurry, he does not see him, and he would be the chances are that he would be the man who lets the pipe fall to the ground, which breaks it into several pieces. Of course, this is all a ruse, and the man who drops the pipe is ready for someone else. This trick used to bring in quite a decent amount, but it has seldom tried nowadays.

In Glasgow there used to be a respectable-looking old man who was reported to make a living out of a postage stamp. He frequented the better class of cheap lodging houses, and dressed neatly, though poorly. He had a simple, but apparently very successful method of working. He was always writing in answer to advertisements; after having sent off several letters, he would hear of another place likely to do so, so, of course, he applied for it at once.

Unfortunately, when the letter was written, he found that he had no stamp, that he had used the last one, and that he had no money to buy another. If he delayed writing, the situation would be filled, but if he wrote at once he would be sure to get the place. What hard lines! And he had been out of work for weeks and had now come to the end of his tether. Of course, those who did not know him felt sorry for this unfortunate state of affairs, and would give him a stamp, or the price of one. It seldom happened that he was refused, as the more lucky men in the place would generally give him the penny. Under favorable conditions, he would carry two or three boxes of letters and get several pennies.

Sometimes he would take his stand near a post office looking ruefully at his pocket, after going through all his pockets, with the result that some charitable woman who was passing would ask him his trouble, and give him a penny, or two-pence, on hearing his tale. It was said that he had admitted making as much as a dollar a day by this means.

One On Roosevelt.

Senator Knox, who is receiving many political visitors at his Valley Forge home, is telling them a new story about President Roosevelt.

"The president," he says, "was surprised by a Kansas delegation at Oyster Bay not long ago. The president appeared with coat and collar off, trousers hitched by belt and mopping his forehead.

"Ah, gentlemen," he said, "delighted to see you; delighted. But I'm very busy putting in my hay, you know. Just come down to the barn with me and we'll talk it over while I work."

"Down to the barn hustled delegation and president."

"Mr. Roosevelt," seized a pitchfork. But, behold, there was no hay on the floor! "John, John!" shouted the president to someone in the hayloft, "where's all the hay?" "I ain't had time to throw it back, sir," since you threw it up yesterday, sir," came a man's voice from the loft.

The Blue Danube.

London Express.

It was a "liven cuff and the quick thought of the woman who wore it that gave us one of the prettiest of the music-agers, and in two minutes that cuff was manuscript. Its mate followed. Still the inspiration was incomplete. Strauss was frantic, and was about to make a wild dash for home with the third part of his waltz ringing uncertainly in his head. Suddenly his frau bethought herself of her collar and in an instant the remaining bars of "The Blue Danube" decorated its surface.

Out of Her Class.

A member of the school board of a certain Pennsylvania town relates the sad case of a young woman who failed on examination for appointment as teacher in the public school of that place.

The mother of the disappointed young woman was asked by a friend whether the daughter had succeeded in running the gauntlet of the examiners.

"No," was the reply in mournful tone. "Jenny didn't pass at all. Maybe you won't believe, sir, but them examiners asked the poor girl about things that happened years before she was born."

THE MEDICINAL VALUE OF FRESH FRUIT JUICES

One of the Greatest Wonders of the Age.

Hundreds Have Been Made Well by Taking Advantage of an Ottawa Physician's Discovery.

Everyone knows how beneficial fruit is, when eaten regularly. Fruit is nature's laxative—the finest kidney regulator—and the ideal skin tonic. Unfortunately, the medicinal principle of fruit occurs only in minute quantities. In order to consume enough fruit to relieve biliousness, one would also consume a large amount of woody fibre or pulp, which would upset the stomach and impair digestion.

An Ottawa physician discovered a way to get around these difficulties. He pressed the juice from apples, oranges, figs and grapes—and then forced one more atom of the bitter principle from the discarded orange peel, into the concentrated juices. This formed a new compound, having all the curative effects of fresh fruit—and

In a highly intensified degree. These valuable tonics and internal antiseptics were added and the whole prepared into tablets.

THE Penn Esther RANGE

burns either wood or coal with equal facility. The change in the Penn Esther from coal to wood may be made in thirty seconds. The only alteration necessary to burn wood consists in removing the lining of one end of the fire box and inserting a perforated, cast iron wood-grate, which is supplied free with all Penn Esther Ranges. When this end lining is removed, the Penn Esther will burn a stick of wood 24 inches long. The advantages of this are obvious in country sections where wood is extensively used for fuel.
