SYNDICATE TO PAY DEBTS OF PRINCESS.

Jewelry and Furs of King Leopold's Daughter in Pawn in Vienna and Paris.

Vienna, Oct. 19.—The affairs of Princess Louise of Belgium will shortly occupy the attention of the Vienna and Paris courts.

It is stated that the princess has run up debts of nearly $1,000,000. She receives $10,000 a year from her father, King Leopold of Belgium, and $15,000 from Prince Philip of Coburg. Both have refused to give her a penny more.

The king recently wrote in a letter received in Vienna: "I fear my daughter Louise will some day die of hunger if she goes on piling up debts."

A syndicate is being formed to liquidate the princess' debts. Her note of hand is now worth only ten per cent of its nominal value, and her jewelry and furs are all in pawn in Vienna.

The Princess Louise, who is the eldest daughter of King Leopold, was married to Prince Philip in 1875, when she was seventeen years of age.

Her married life was very unhappy and in 1895 she made the acquaintance of Count Mattachich Keglevitch and eloped with him.

Family Of Blind Musicians.

Pall Mall Gazette.

A concert as pathetic as it was interesting took place lately at Hamburg. The concert givers were a sister and two brothers, all blind; a fourth brother, who is studying composition at the Berlin Academy of Music, and whose works have already been very favorably commented on, is similarly afflicted. The sister possesses a fine and well-trained soprano voice of considerable compass, while one brother who on this occasion acted as her accompanist, holds an appointment at Muhlheim-an-der-Ruhr as organist. The third brother is a violist of considerable talent. The family are natives of Muhlheim.

According To Scripture.

"Young man," said the clerical-looking customer to the clerk at the book counter, "that purchase of mine amounted to one dollar and fifty cents, I believe?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I gave you a two-dollar bill at least twenty minutes ago and I haven't received my fifty cents back yet."

"Very sorry, sir," replied the clerk, "but you know what the Good Book says on that point," and politely handing the customer a Bible, he pointed to Job, fourteenth chapter, fourteenth verse: "All the days of my life will I wait till my change come."

Ageless Love.

It is a splendid thing to think that the woman you really love will never grow old to you. Through the wrinkles of time, through the mask of years, if you really love her, you will always see the face you loved and won. And a woman who really loves a man does not see that he grows old. He is not decrepit to her. He does not tremble. He is not old. She always sees the same gallant gentleman who won her hand and heart.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Perney Hirtsehman Tells His Part of Story

The Case Fully Reported, Proves the Work Was Done By Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 19.—A well-known resident at 93 Sackville street, Perney Hirtschman, who has been in a somewhat serious condition lately, has recovered, and says: "Six months ago my appetite fell off and my health became very poor. I had terrible attacks of indigestion, and often was unable to sleep at night. My poor color showed what an ill man I was. I tried numerous remedies but the only genuine one was Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. Two boxes cured my indigestion. My appetite increased and my strength came back quickly. To-day I have a fine zest for my meals. I feel as strong and healthy as a young boy. Because they are so cleansing and so tonic in their effect, I think Dr. Hamilton's Pills should be used by every person. My wife used them regularly with grand results."

"THE RIGHT OF WAY."

How Sir Gilbert Parker Created Charley Steele.

Montreal Herald.

Readers of fiction and playgoers have little thought of the curious methods and devious pathways through which their favorite characters come to them. But how Dickens came "to create Micawber, Thackeray, the Colonel, Sue, the Wandering Jew, Irving, Rip Van Winkle; and Dumas, D'Artagnan and his brave companions, is almost as interesting, if not more interesting than, the famous stories in which these characters appear. Side lights upon authorship would be a good title for a very fascinating volume.

An apt illustration of this fact arose during a conference between Eugene W. Presbrey and Sir Gilbert Parker concerning the dramatization of "The Right of Way." "Raffles," Presbrey's dramatization of Horning's gentlemanly burglar, was fairly started on its long run and was making London sit up a bit and talk. It was very daring—a self-confessed thief in the limelight, with a love interest, and possessing the full sympathy of the audience. It certainly was not due to the same old technique hampered by the conventions of social moral, and legal rules were defied in the play—and the audience assisted.

"How did you do it?" asked Parker. "Heredity," said Presbrey. "Well-bred people won't knowingly entertain a thief as an honored guest at home or on the stage—though, curiously enough they will in the novel. But make the man a victim to something; let him inherit his misfortune, the bit of bone pressing in upon the brain, which, removed, would make him sane—and society immediately organizes itself for his relief. That's what made 'Raffles,' a consistent, human character and the play such a success."

"How did you find Charles Steele?" asked Presbrey, in turn. "Reincarnation," was Parker's reply. And then he told the story of how the book was written. "I first met Steel years before the novel was made, during one of my voyages across the Atlantic. A polished, incisive, biting, cutting, questioning, cynical Steele. Physically and mentally the man fascinated me. I never knew him intimately. I rather believe that no one ever did, but I yearned to make a book of him, and when some years later I learned of his death I discussed the possibilities with my publishers, who were enthusiastic. But then my troubles began. The man wouldn't stay in the book. There wasn't any answer to his questions—there wasn't any end to them. He died unfinished; I laid the work aside with the feeling that somewhere there was a great deal more of Charley Steele; and he drifted out of my mind.

"Late one night, in London, with an imperative journey to begin the next morning, my tailor delivered in person an assortment of coats, waistcoats, and trousers that might have been made for another man. The dilemma was a serious one, but my tailor was a man of energy and resource. I must go with him to his shop. His foreman and men should have everything right, delay and peace of mind should be saved for me, and reputation for him. Into a carriage we bundled, the maker of clothes, the clothes, and the wearer of clothes.

"It was midnight, when, in a narrow unfrequented lane, this foreman who was to see everything made right came to his door in response to our knocks, and I was face to face with a perfect reincarnation of Charley Steele. The same monocle, the same half-burned cigarette, the same cynical smile, the same hands, face, hair, eyes, and the same 'Who knows?' in response to 'Can it be done in time?' Was it really Steele? Oh, no, the Steele that I had known was really dead. It was simply a coincidence—but it made my book? One must be reincarnated—must live again, to get one's questions answered."

PATIENCE BROUGHT REWARD.

Wealthy Methodist at Last Subscribed.

In the several years of his secretaryship of education, Dr. Potts, through his unfailing energy raised millions of dollars for the educational work of the Methodist church in Canada. His efforts were not confined to Victoria College, but all the educational institutions of the church were under his financial care.

The story is told that when he first became secretary of this fund he approached a wealthy Methodist in Toronto for a subscription.

"I don't believe in educating other people's children," said the W. M.

"But you will have children of your own to go to the college when they grow up," argued Dr. Potts.

"Oh, no I wont, my babies are all girls."

This was in the days when higher education among women was not so popular as it is now.

Just a year or so ago Dr. Potts was looking over the list of "freshettes" at Annesley Hall, the Victoria College women's residence, and he noticed a name corresponding to that of the wealthy Methodist. Now, the doctor had a wonderful memory. He hied himself at once to the office of the man, who had refused to subscribe twenty years ago.

"Good morning, Mr. ——," said he, with his benignant smile, "you wouldn't help to educate other folks' sons, now suppose you do something in celebration of your own daughter's advent to college?"

And the "W. M." gave a handsome subscription.

Moving A Theatre Building.

The most wonderful performance of its sort ever undertaken is now in progress in Brooklyn, N.Y., being no less than the moving entire of the old Montauk Theatre from its present site on Fulton street to Flatbush avenue. The theatre building, which is 167 feet long, 85 feet wide and 95 feet high, and weighs 17,000,000 pounds, is being moved bodily to its new site. If the contractors succeed in safely moving the theatre intact to its new site they get $75,000. Sufficient steel girders, rods, screws and ties have been used in bracing and lifting the theatre to build a small railroad. There are 1,600 screws to lift the building, 1,600 steel rollers to move it along on, and 700 steel beams as a temporary foundation.

Tips For The Farmers

BY UNCLE JOSH.

A hog board will be given a trial in Kingston, and should it be found a success, will be continued. It should receive the hearty co-operation of all interested. The board will be held in conjunction with the Frontenac cheese board, and the first boarding of hogs will take place on Thursday next, at 1:30 p.m., at the board's room, in the Whig hall.

Secretary Pillar advocated the opening of such a board some few weeks ago, but no definite steps were taken in the matter, until Thursday's meeting when the matter was again brought before the notice of the board by Mr. Pillar.

Picton has a hog board, and it is pointed out that it has proven a great success. If Picton can run a successful hog board, why should not Kingston be able to do the same? This is the question, and it is the opinion of a great many that the board can be run on a successful basis. Let there be a grand rally at the opening. It is a move in the right direction.

A week ago Thursday cheese sold at 13 1-16c. on the Frontenac board, but on Thursday of this week only 12¼c. was realized. The price varies considerably every week.

One of the buyers at the cheese board remarked that he had no objection to the boarding of hogs provided they did not squeal on him.

"Kingston was never noted for being on the hog," said another, "but I guess we can run a hog board all right.

Canadian exhibitors carried off most of the honors at the National Dairy show, when the championship Ayrshire herd of Canada competed with the largest show of that breed ever brought together in a show ring. All the championships were won by Dominion entires. The two Canadian exhibitors, were R. R. Ness, Hbwick, Que., and Robert Hunter & Son, of Maxville, Ont. Barcheskie King's Own, owned by Mr. Ness, was the first prize aged bull, senior champion and grand champion of the breed.

Imported Nethersall Good Time was the first prize yearling, and junior champion bull of the herd. Hunter & Son took fifteen prizes and Mr. Ness, eighteen prizes.

The United States crop of turkeys this year looks like a shortage. From reports from many parts of the country sent to The Produce Review, there is a light crop of this much-sought-after table fowl. Raisers of turkeys in California report last year as high as $5 for one bird. It looks like costly eating for Thanksgiving Day for Uncle Sam this year.

A report comes from the Peterboro Examiner that many people in the northern parts of Peterboro county, have been making a practice of shipping wild duck and wild geese eggs to the United States. This practice, if allowed to go on, must materially affect the numbers of our wild fowl in the country.

The cheesemakers of the state of Wisconsin have formed a union and their demands for next year are given by the Milwaukee Free Press as follows: Five hundred dollars cash per year with free house rent, fuel, milk and cheese.

W. J. Canning of Ardtrea, Simcoe county, has a crop of millet this year that he claims yielded him more returns per acre than does corn. He sowed it in June.

On the streets of one of the large western cities, a newspaper man met an old farmer, who looked quite like "a fish out of water," and the conversation that followed showed that his appearance did not belie his situation. He said that, after making a great success on the farm, he had removed with his children to the city; that at first, while he had the education of his sons and daughter to look after he had been reasonably content; but after a few years, when the young people had finished their schooling, gone into business for themselves and married he began to find city life intolerable. I hate the noise, the dirt, the smoke and the perpetual excitement, hurry and worry," he exclaimed. "I long for the country. I am going out to the farm again. I shall surround myself with the things I like—horses, cattle, hogs, chickens, etc.—and spend my old age under the clean sky, in quiet and content. My wife held out for a long time, desiring to be near the children, but last week she decided for the farm, and, thank God! we are going back." The experience of this good friend was typical. No life is sounder, sweeter or better than that of the farm. He who has known its joys, may be happy amid other surroundings, if provided with congenial occupation; but when he has nothing to do, the changed situation becomes unbearable. The city has its attractions and advantages; but for real living, and rational enjoyment of God's good gift's to man give us the farm every time. It is the best place to live, the best place to die.

MOTOR ROADS IN AFRICA.

Service to Run Between Congo and Nile.

In the Congo Free States, under the direction of a central automobile department, more than a year's work has been done in the construction of special highways and the establishment of the forerunners of a network of automobile freight lines.

The road on which work is being rapidly pushed, and on the completed portion of which freight is now being transported, will be the longest and most important of these enterprises. It will connect the congo with the Nile at Rejaf, only a short distance south of Gondokoro, which is now reached regularly by passengers on freight steamers from Khartoum.

When the freight road is completed, in about two years, says the Motor World, the Upper Congo will have automobile, steamboat and rail connections with the Mediterranean, as well as steam transportation to the mouth of the Congo and Europe.

The starting point is about 600 miles up the Congo above Stanley Pool. There are some long stretches of navigation where the loaded automobiles will be carried on small steamers, but the total length of the freight road will be 500 miles.

The attitude of the natives along the Welle Maku towards the advancing enterprise is most gratifying to the authorities. They gave a hearty welcome to the whites. The chiefs have complained that the carrier service between the Belgian posts takes too many men from their usual pursuits, and the whole region is happy over the fact thgt the freight road will entirely do away with the caravans of porters carrying loads on their backs for hundreds of miles.

Manzali, the most important chief of this section, on his own initiative, says that if they pay his subjects the usual price for work by the day the whites need not bother themselves with the question of labor supply. He will provide the men and take them from the villages near where the road is being built.

The entire road will be first-class for the heavy hauling intended and perfect drainage is being provided at every point. For some years the government has been experimenting with two or three types of automobile freight carriers.

A well known English machine was finally rejected, chiefly on account of its excessive weight, and a Belgian wagon, especially built for trophical service has been adopted and is said to be satisfactory in all respects. The only change in it which the report recommends is that certain Congo instead of European wood be used in the construction of the machines now building for the service.

As fast as the road is completed the wagons are hauling material and supplies to the roadbed, giving the machines and roadbed a thorough test. The loaded wagons travel at the rate of ten to twelve miles an hour, and it is expected that this will be the average speed between the Congo and the Nile when the system of highways is completed and the traffic is fully in operation.

Inagination As A Cure.

Dundee Advertiser.

It is conceded by scientists that imagination has much power as a curative agent. A concrete example occurred in the experience of Sir Humphry Davy. A man suffering from paralysis went to him to be treated by electricity.

When the patient had seated himself Davy, as a preliminary, placed a small glass thermometer beneath his tongue to take his temperature. The sick man thought that this was the instrument for curing him and declared that he felt it run through all his system. Davy, curious to see what lasting effect the imagination would exert, did not undeceive the man, but sent him away, telling him to return daily to have the treatment repeated.

The man did as he was told and daily sat in a chair with the end of a little thermometer tucked beneath his tongue. In a few days the paralysis was completely cured by the patient's own imagination.

Many a young man is sorry he spoke after spending a day pricing furniture.

Merely A Reporter.

A literary pilgrim once made his way to Summit, N.J., to pay his respects to Hamilton Wright Mabie. At the station he asked the liveryman, who had been in service there for thirteen years:

"Can you tell me where Dr. Mabie lives?"

"Never heard of him," replied the liveryman.

"Surely you must," continued the pilgrim. "I mean Hamilton Wright Mabie."

"Shucks," responded the driver. "He ain't a doctor. He's a reporter for a newspaper."

When told of this incident Mr. Mabie put the seal on it by saying:

"And just to think that I subscribed for a wooden leg for that liveryman!"
