The traveller looking for the first time on the lovely grass covered mountain of Vesuvius finds it hard to believe that it has tried time and again to destroy wonderful cultivated farms and thousands of lives. He is surprised and disappointed both when he is told that Vesuvius is now smouldering and has been in active eruption and that the government refuses to let the tourists make the ascent.

He takes a carriage and drives through many small towns, attractive because of their fertile, well-cared farms. The thrifty, contented farmers, work from early morning until late at night, not realizing the harm that may come to them at any time.

The excavations and ruins disclose the fact that centuries ago Pompeii was one of the most powerful and imperialistic of Italian cities. One can read words to this effect in the Vich strong winds bore such heavy, dark clouds that very little light was seen. The shocks soon came at shorter intervals, the streets and the sky were filled with smoke. The streets were alive with the screaming of women and the cries of children. Some were raising their hands heavenward in prayer, others interlocked with arms were running about aimlessly. When the sky became red with sparks, the winds were carrying from Vesuvius, men and women were really panic-stricken and died for their lives. Centuries later when excavations were begun, mothers were found lying with children, one woman was found carrying her husband's trousers and the key to the house, another had just slipped into her embroidered slipper. In the barracks were found two gladiators who were unable to make their escape. Some entire families perished. A father was found carrying a gold sheep to his in a subterranean passage in a garden. He was followed by a slave carrying a lamp, a sack of gold, silver and bronze. He fell before he reached his destiny, while his family of twenty were waiting for him in a subterranean passage.

It was not many years before—the terrible catastrophe was forgotten, and the city abandoned. It was not until 1757 when the building of a road on the south side of the city led to the unearthing of some tombs and ancient monuments. Though several finds were made it was not until 1807 that the excavation was begun seriously.

A number of large houses were excavated, including the villa of Diomedes and the house of Sallust. Queen Caroline took a great interest in the finding of the hidden treasure, the villa of Diomedes, was cleared, the tombs, the house of Pansa and the great amphitheatre. King Murat gave liberally to the carrying out of the work. Little by little from 1815 to 1890 the Temple of Fortune, the Temple of Apollo, the baths of the Family always reclined on benches. The husband took the head of the table, his wife was on one side of him and his son on the other. The guests were placed on other benches, according to their rank. The banquets were sometimes sumptuous and lasted for hours.

The museums in Pompeii and Naples show that beautiful statues were plentiful in Pompeii, they adorned the houses, the streets and the temples. The temple of Apollo was adorned with a statue of Apollo and a Diana in bronze that surmounted the arch. A magnificent bust of Jupiter was taken from the temple dedicated to that god. The most famous of the bronzes is the dancing Faun found in the streets of Nola and the Satyr in the house of the Centaure. The Faun represents the joy of life sustained by physical strength. The other shows a young Satyr pouring water from a beaker. Every line of the body shows ease and grace. The same artistic touches were given to the bronze and silver dishes, vases and lamps. Some were shaped in the form of faces, others were decorated with richest embossing. The house of Pansa, the poet, is sufficiently well preserved to show how beautiful Pompeii was before it suffered destruction.

The house of the Rich Man was the largest private house in Pompeii. But this is only a small part of the interesting things to be found there. It is hard to imagine anything more splendid than the great Stabian baths adorned with marble and mosaics. So large they could accommodate hundreds at a time.

In keeping with this splendor are the ruins of the Forum, temples, the theatres and the gladiatorial barracks. Beautiful as are these ruins under an azure sky, the great marble vases become things of gold when the blood-red sun goes down, whispering the words "this is the rubble of life, joy and sorrow, beauty and destruction, never playing hide and seek with each other."

REMARKABLE ESCAPE.

French Deputy Steps From Train at Speed.

Paris, Oct. 19.—M. Farnard Rabier, the vice-president of the Chamber of Deputies, has had a marvellous escape from death while travelling from Bordeaux to Orleans.

Early this morning M. Rabier, who was but half-awake, left his compartment and opened a door which he thought led to the lavatory. He stepped forward and fell from the train, which at the moment was travelling at the rate of thirty-six miles an hour. He lay stunned for some moments, but on recovering was agreeably surprised to find that, beyond a few bruises, he had sustained no injury. He walked along the line in search of assistance, and soon came to a gatekeeper's house, where his contusions were bandaged. A second train going to Orleans was stopped, and M. Rabier resumed the journey which had been so dramatically interrupted.

M. Rabier, provided by the gatekeeper with a red lantern, returned along the line until a train approached in the right direction. He then held up the lantern and stopped the train.

Heroes Who Brave Death to Save Life.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 19.—The regular fall meeting of the Carnegie Hero Commission was held yesterday, and F. M. Wilcox, the secretary, announced that twenty-four persons have received awards for bravery. The number is the largest in the history of the commission. With to-night's awards 126 persons have benefited by the hero fund and 1,121 persons have been refused either money or medals.

For the first time since the beginning of the hero fund a negro received a reward.

The largest award was a gold medal and $5,000 to Andrew J. Hodger of Sante Fe, Kan. Mr. Hodger is county superintendent of schools. Two men, Joseph King and William Nunn, were caught by a cavern of sand while at the bottom of a deep well at Pierceville, Kan. Nunn was suffocated and King was slowly dying. Notwithstanding another cavern seemed certain within a short time, Mr. Hodger had himself lowered into the well, and saved King and recovered Nunn's corpse. The night after the rescue there was another fall of a ton or more of sand into the well.

The money awarded Mr. Hodger is to be used in educating his four children.

Emil Carl Auris, in National Magazine. They work on the great tall buildings that tower far up toward the sky. Or down in the mine's dark level where death is always nigh.

With death in a hundred guises they battle each day in the year. Without the notes of a bugle Or drum to give them cheer.

No flag have they to lead them: No glory to spur them when they stand face to face with danger: But they stick to their posts like MEN.

They ride in the cab of the engine As the great train passes through the night. With the lives of scores depending On their reading the signals right.

They stand at the helm of the vessel, As the ship comes and tows the gale; Or cling to the storm-swift rigging To hurl the boating sail.
