THREE ARE KILLED

VENDETTA IS ENDED BY A TRIPLE DUEL.

Six Men Fight With Pistols on the Street of a Sicilian Town.

Rome, Nov. 16.—Two families of Comitini, in Sicily, have fought a terrible duel with three men on each side.

There had been a vendetta between the families for generations, and finally to wipe it out they decided to fight in formal fashion.

It was arranged that Signor Conti and his two sons should fight Signor Alessi and his two brothers. The chief square of Comitini was chosen for the encounter, and it was agreed that pistols should be the weapons.

Within a few moments of the beginning of the duel Signor Conti and the two brothers of the Alessi family fell dead, and the three survivors sustained serious wounds.

A crowd of inhabitants witnessed the duel. The police force, consisting of two carabinieri, stayed away until the affair was over.

FRENCH SCIENTIST A WIZARD.
Grows Plants That Are Like Real Things.

The particular variety of scientific necromancy of Prof. Ledue, of Nantes, France, consists in toying with life and in producing artificial plants and cells which conduct themselves exactly like natural growths, but which are composed only of inert matter.

Ledue's experiments are so simple that anyone can repeat them without elaborate implements. In the first place a tiny seed must be made, which consists of two parts cane sugar and one part of copper sulphate. Drop this seed in a solution of one to ten per cent. of potassium ferrocyanide, one to ten per cent. of common table salt and two per cent. of gelatin, and in a few hours or days something will happen.

The seed germinates, roots and stems are produced, leaves unfold and the growth shoots out in all directions. The growth would baffle a botanist. He could not distinguish it from a real plant.

The plant has all the functions of vegetation except one. Its development is arrested by poisons; it heals its wounds; it feeds; in a word, it does everything that can be expected of a plant except the reproduction of its own kind, and even that Ledue refuses to consider an unsurmountable obstacle.

Although Ledue's artificial plants resemble natural plants so closely and he is himself inclined to consider them a form of life, his opponents hold that they are no more vital than a paper flower or a wax doll. Nevertheless the experiments have raised a little scientific tempest in Germany and France.

Scientists are wondering if the gradations of living to dead matter are so fine that it is impossible to determine at what point life begins, just as among the lowermost creatures it is often impossible to classify organisms as plants or animals. If the functions of vegetation can be reproduced by what we have been pleased to regard as dead matter it would seem as though we should have to frame a new definition of life.

INTERNATIONALISM.

Most Remarkable Sign of the Times.

The increasing extent to which national problems and development all over the world are becoming matters of internationalism is one of the most noteworthy and remarkable signs of the times. Certainly, if the nineteenth century was one of nationalism the twentieth is rapidly becoming a cycle of internationalism. Great Britain's pressing problems are those of her foreign relations or the relations of her home government with the dependent alien peoples. The questions that press for settlement at the Japanese capital are largely of international import, concerning the emigration of Japan's citizens to other lands. Germany is concerned with the balance of power in Europe. The fate of the Austro-Hungarian empire is dependent on the centrifugal forces acting upon diverse nationalities within its borders. The French republic, which is becoming more and more a purely socialistic state, is concerned with class problems, which, however, socialistic as they are, involve the recognition of class rather than nationality, but are international in that they are causing a drift away from the old conception of patriotism and breaking down barriers between nations. China is schooling herself in western ways, that she may the more effectively protect herself against the forces of western civilization led by Japan. The nations which move most and more closely interwoven with our necessary relations to the peoples and governments of the rest of the world. And, as a final expression of the international drift of men's thoughts today, the month of October saw the closing sessions of the second world congress of peace at the Dutch capital, where for four months representatives of forty-five nations have been talking over in the friendliest of spirits the vexed questions between them.

They'll put you in such condition you'll never know you have a heart, make your brain clear and active, your nerves strong, your blood rich and pure and your whole being thrill with a new life.
