REAL BRITISH CRUSOES

COMMUNITY OF ISLANDERS ON TRISTAN DA CUNHA.

Live Simple Life Entirely Isolated From the Rest of the World—Depend For News on Passing Ships—No Mail Service — Place Swarms With Rats—No Doctors, But Few Deaths.

A community which exactly fits Herbert Spencer's definition of a simple society—"forming a single working whole unsubjected to any other, and of which the parts co-operate with or without a regulating centre"—such is Tristan da Cunha, Britain's little island possession situated 1,500 miles southwest of the Cape of Good Hope. Even the official bluebook presupposes a lack of knowledge on the part of its readers as to the whereabouts and conditions of life on the island, and for once in a way that solemn publications allows itself to relax into humor.

Tristan da Cunha (it says) is generally supposed to be inhabited by a dusky British race, who live on fish, the spoils of the wrecks which strew its ironbound coasts, and the publications of the Religious Tract Society.

Up to a year or two back it has always been the custom for a man of war to visit the island once annually with mails and supplies, but this has now been discontinued, though it is only fair to state that the Government offered to give the inhabitants a free grant of land if they chose to leave their isolated island home. The people, however, of this right little, tight little island, who, by the way, eschew tobacco and "intoxicating liquors" in any shape or form, preferred to stay, and they now have to depend for news of the outside world on the chance of passing ships. One of the latest visits to the island was made by Mr. Casper Keytel at the instance of the Colonial Office, as it was feared that the inhabitants might be short of food, and I cannot do better than give some impressions of his visit to this most interesting spot, says a writer in The Bystander.

Their Working Motto.

"On the morning of Feb. 7, 1907, the Greyhound was towed out of Table Bay, and, after an uneventful voyage of exactly three weeks' duration, dropped sail a few miles off the lonely British possession in the South Atlantic. Our approach had been observed, and soon two boats from the island were alongside. The excitement of the occupants was most marked, and their wild delight on hearing that we carried mail from the Cape cannot adequately be described. The food supplies were most acceptable, but the letters from their kith and kin across the sea were the greatest gifts of the day.

"There are at the present time seventeen men, twenty-six women and thirty-eight children on the island, making a total of eighty-one souls, and they are a very happy community. The motto of each is, 'Consider my neighbor and my neighbor will consider me,' and the practical way in which they act up to it enables them to live together in peace and concord.

"Immediately behind the landing rises a cliff to the height of about twenty-five feet, leading to a plateau measuring six miles by a quarter of a mile, on which the settlement stands. There are fifteen houses, built of stone and thatched with tussock grass, on the site, of which three are not quite completed for habitation. Although primitive in design, they are not unpleasing to the eye, and are certainly comfortable.

Settlers Are Healthy.

"Every householder has an acre of land under cultivation about three miles from the settlement proper, on which potatoes only are grown, and each patch is walled in with stones. The planting is done in September and October, and the harvest gathered in February and March. On the island there are about 800 sheep, eighty tame and forty wild cattle, twenty pigs, about fifty geese and over one hundred fowls. Fish in abundance is obtainable, so the possibility of the little community being starved out, as the British Government apparently fears, is somewhat remote. Rats are to be found everywhere, and with their extermination, which, by reason of the nature of the land, is an almost impossible task, the growing of wheat would be possible, thereby adding to the material comforts of the settlers.

"The settlers are a very healthy lot and intermarriage has not yet resulted in physical deterioration. They have few ailments to contend with, and for these their simple home remedies suffice. The last death occurred in 1904, the cause being consumption.

Men Fearless Sailors.

"The mode of living is simplicity itself. The natives rise at six in the morning and retire to rest about eight in the evening. One day is just like another, yet each finds enough to do, and time does not hang heavily. The women folk attend to the household duties and assist in hauling in the boats, and the men occupy themselves looking over the cattle and sheep, working on the potato patches, collecting firewood and fishing. They put off to passing ships and exchange sheep, poultry, eggs, fish and milk for such articles as tea, coffee, sugar and articles of clothing. Each household contributes something to barter with, and each receives a share of the goods obtained. The men are fearless sailors, and put out to sea in almost any weather, provided a heavy swell is not running in to the landing cove. Seventeen vessels were personally communicated with during 1906, comprising one yacht, nine barks, three steamers two ships and two whalers, and in addition seventeen barks, one steamer and twenty ships were sighted.

Fond of Dancing.

"When the islanders give themselves over to amusement dancing is the chief attraction. The Tristan band is made up of one violin and two accordians, and, although their repertoire consists of selections of mature age, they are not to be despised on that account, and the musicians keep perfect time. I attended a few 'hops,' and was struck with the uniformly good dancing.

"Early in 1906 Rev. Mr. Barrow became a resident of the island. He is a Church of England clergyman of independent means, and the spirit of self-denial which prompted him to leave the old country to minister to the spiritual needs of the inhabitants of the Lonely Rock cannot be too highly praised. A fairly commodious building has been constructed as a church, and the services, held twice weekly, are bright and very well attended. Mr. Barrow's connection with the island has a trace of romance attaching to it. His mother when a girl was wrecked off Inaccessible Island, near by, and as a thank offering for the saving from the sea of the good woman who brought him into the world he dedicated a portion of his life to the service of the islanders and their descendants who effected the rescue."

A BEAUTY'S ROMANCE.

Sequel to Secret Marriage—Aristocrat's Wife Dying in Poverty.

A strange story of the romance of a beautiful woman's life and the sad plight she has fallen upon in her declining days—a story affecting a well-known and highly placed Notts county family—was brought to light at a recent meeting of the Newark Board of Guardians through an application for out-door relief for a woman who has been in the workhouse and infirmary at Newark, and whose relatives had fetched her out. They now applied for out-relief rather than that she should go into the "House." It appears that the woman, who is 46 years of age, is suffering from cancer. Some 25 years ago she was known for her beauty and attractive figure. She was at that time a barmaid. A young officer, son of one of the best known county families in Notts, fell in love with her and married her at a London Registry office. When the news leaked out there was a violent opposition on the part of his aristocratic relatives. They never acknowledged their new relation, and six months after marriage a divorce and $10,000 was obtained by the wife. With this money she took a fashionable hotel in the south of England, and there lost $7,500. Afterwards, according to her story, she traveled abroad with a gentleman for five years. Then she became addicted to drink, lost her physical attractions and sank. For some years she has been buffeted from pillar to post until she reached the haven of the Newark Infirmary. A pitiful appeal was made by her sister to the Guardians to permit her to spend the remainder of her life in her cottage home near Newark. The Guardians granted half a dollar per week out-relief. It was suggested that an appeal should made to the family whose name she bears, but this was not persevered with, although the chairman thought they would prefer to keep her off the rates rather than drag an honored name into the publicity of a Board room.

INSANE DEAL IN SHEEP.

Inmates of Asylum In Iceland Make Money Out of Sheep Farming.

A special committee recently reported to the Asylum Management Board of Donegal that an inmate of an asylum in the county had while there been dealing in sheep for the past six years. He had taken land for grazing them and now owned a number of sheep. It was further reported that asylum attendants had taken land from this inmate and had grazed sheep thereon belonging to themselves, and that at frequent intervals during the past six years the inmate had been allowed out of the asylum to transact business at fairs in charge of attendants who were, it is alleged, interested with him in sheep dealing. On one occasion the inmate received a telegram regarding the sale of sheep, and at another time was paid in the asylum grounds by a man to whom he had sold sheep. The assistant medical superintendent was instructed to make inquiries into the alleged action of the attendants, and the subcommittee recommended the governor to see that the inmate's sheep dealing profits were applied towards the obliteration of the account for his maintenance.

Want Censorship Abolished.

A petition signed by a number of the most prominent dramatists, novelists and critics of England, for the abolition of the office of the censor of plays, will be presented to the Prime Minister in about a month's time.

Already the document bears the signatures of some of the most distinguished names in the literary world.

The matter, which has been simmering for months past, has been brought to a head by the continued ban of Maeterlinck's "Monna Vanna" and Edward R. Garnett's play, "The Breaking Point," which was intended for the Haymarket Theatre.

The signatories wish it particularly to be understood that they are animated by no feeling against Mr. Redford personally, their contention being—and this is the whole point of the matter—that no censorship is exercised in any other department of art.

The Bo'sun's Pipe.

Of late years there has been a tendency for the bo'sun's pipe to be heard very infrequently in our modern fleet. Now, in order to preserve the art of piping in the navy, the Admiralty has directed that 10 per cent. of boys in training establishments are to be instructed in such familiar and traditional calls as the following: Call hands, lash up and stow, reelers, heave round capstan, walk back capstan, hands taut, hoist away, high enough, pipe dinner, pipe down, pipe side, call away boat, call away galley, stand by, wash clothes and sweepers.—London Telegraph.

Mayor Mackay, of Renfrew, left for London, England, on Thursday. He expects to be through his business there by Christmas.

How nice and quiet the children are now.

Immediately after mass on Sunday, December 1st, Rev. J. T. Cote, was presented with an address and purse by the local branch of the C.M.B.A., and the members of the Calabogie mission.

ENGLISH VILLAGE LIFE.

Archbishop Draws Depressing Picture of Rural Morals.

The Archbishop of Canterbury at his primary visitation in Ashford Parish Church recently, said few things had struck him more in reading the returns of the clergy than the melancholy account which, from some of the smaller parishes especially, had been frankly and honestly given of the condition of morality in some of their homes. It would be hard, indeed, to lay the responsibility for evils, which, as some had pointed out, clearly and markedly existed generations back—to throw responsibility for these things upon the men of to-day, as though they were neglectful in a sense that had brought about harm. But, on the other hand, no one could look without dismay upon accounts such as were given from some of the most rural parishes, especially as to the pre-nuptial wrongdoing, and as to the popular opinion which found expression or did not find expression thereupon.

Speaking of the monopoly of the parish priest's position, the Primate remarked: I have found men on the other side of the Atlantic at first simply incredulous when I told them that by the law of the land every man holding the position of a parish priest has a monopoly to the extent that no other man in holy orders can officiate in his church without his consent. A man to whom I spoke said, in words that seemed to me significant, "Well, that must prod the sluggard pretty smartly" in the sense that it must keep others out of his church and lay a responsibility upon the parish priest of a tremendous kind for the adequate discharge of functions that ought to be performed. That depressing picture on which I have just touched of the moral condition of many of our parishes does present a mighty difficulty which has got to be faced. A great stone has to be rolled away if we are to discharge aright the tasks which are laid upon us.

TENANTS MUST MARRY.

No Small Holdings For Bachelors at Moulton.

A remarkable feature in connection with the extension of the small holdings movement in Lincolnshire is an agreement adopted at Moulton, near Spalding, where the tenants on taking up land have to bind themselves to marriage within "a reasonable time."

The clerk of Moulton Parish Council stated recently that the project is one associated with the name of Earl Carrington, and that a corn farm of 750 acres is to be cut up into small holdings. Thirteen houses will be provided, and it is these that the Parish Council require shall be occupied either by married couples or by tenants who intend to marry.

There has been a large number of applications for the holdings, and although possession has not yet been given, the tenants have been chosen. Six of them are eligible bachelors, who under the arrangement come to will have to provide themselves with wives shortly.

Of the six selected bachelor tenants some are already engaged to be married, but special interest is being taken with regard to two of those still free. They are currently reported to be searching diligently for suitable partners.

At London Zoo.

The London Zoo is at present rejoicing in the possession of three vastly entertaining young reptiles. They are interesting from many points of view. One is that they are the lineal descendants of the horrific national dragon of China. As a matter of zoological fact, they are a kind of Chinese alligator, which, again, is strange in itself, because up to as recently as 1871 no alligators were supposed to come out of China. The Zoological officials think that the most interesting thing about the new arrivals is that they now prove to sightseers that alligators do come out of China. It was in 1870 that Swinhoe first established the existence of a saurian in the Yang-tsze-kiang; but it was not until eight years later that M. Fauvel, a French official of the Chinese customs, published an account of the alligator closely allied to the Mississippi alligator, although much smaller in size. The alligators at the Zoo are barely two feet in length, but they make up for this by the dimensions of their amiable smile. Other interesting "latest arrivals" are two rare specimens of the monkey tribe. One is the red-faced Ouakari, an entirely arboreal monkey, which hails from the region of the Amazon; and the other is a red-eared Guenon, whose particular beauty lies in the fact that it has a red spot on the tip of its nose.

A Curious Coincidence.

Perhaps one of the most curious coincidences in connection with the running down of a lightship happened a few years ago. A lightship was towed down to a far distant part of the English coast in order to replace one that was to be brought into dock for its periodical overhaul. On the tug arriving with the new lightship at the spot where the old one should have been every one was astonished to find no lightship there at all. Curiously enough, after having been several years upon the spot the vessel had actually been run down and sunk on the very night previous to the day upon which the new lightship arrived to take her place.

Sprung From the Sell.

The man's shirt front was far from spotless, and his waistcoat and coat were covered with grime and grease, but a large buttonhole bouquet was placed on the lapel of his coat.

"What do you think of this?" he said to a casual acquaintance, pointing to the bouquet. "Where do you think I got it?"

"Don't know," admitted the other. "Perhaps it grew there."

Don't sleep standing up, for you may topple over and crack your skull.

For assaulting the C.P.R. station agent at Haley's Station, on Monday, Thomas Murdock, Bristol, was brought before Magistrate Eady, and fined $2 and costs, amounting in all to $6.50.
