In all his travels he had seen nothing like them. The people he found broad-gauged, exceedingly hospitable, and awfully proud of their ancestry. Every man traved his forefathers back to the Mayflower. Doubtless this pride of family and race is responsible for the beautiful country homes and the larger view which the dwellers in Maine take of life and its duties. In some departments of farming, the people of that state Mr. Elliott found very aggressive and enterprising. bank. Nearly all other banks keep their reserves with it. If it fails they fail. It bears the brunt of every panic and is really the financial barometer of the world. When other bankers fear a panic is approaching they call in their loans in order to strengthen their reserve. The Bank of England, under such conditions, is called on to discount bills that other banks refuse to discount, to loan on securities that other banks refuse to loan on. When the business of other banks contracts that of the Bank of England expands, it being as it were, the final tribunal in the courts of finance. If the Bank of England refused to loan or count at periods of incipient distrust the action would precipitate an immediate panic, not alone in England, but throughout the world. England is the greatest moniec power. The ready money available there is for the markets of the world. It can be, and is lent out to everyone for every legitimate purpose. land, and is perhaps a richer country, but the money of France is hoarded, whilst that of England is banked and borrowable. This gives the nation its great power over the markets of the world.
