Grim Terror Comes From Many Sources-Pasteur Institute Filled With Horror-Stricken Patients-Strange Sights In Operating-Room -Agony of Inoculation-Method of Treating Awful Disease.

A writer in "Blackwood" gives his experiences of a dog bite at the Pasteur Institute of India, Kasauli, where he underwent the treatment. India is the land of strange and sudden death, he says. It offers you variegated facilities. You may be eaten by a tiger, bitten by a cobra, mauled by a leopard, carried off by a bubonic plague, or stabbed by a heaven-seeking ghazi. But perhaps the grimmest of the many grim exits that the East offers is hydrophobia. This horror, thanks to the far-seeing though once derided policy of Mr. Walter Long, and his "muzzling order," has practically ceased to be British Isles. But in India it

It contains all the lung healing virtues of the pine tree combined with Wild Cherry Bark and other pectoral remedies. It stimulates the weakened bronchial organs, allays irritation and subdues inflammation, soothes and heals the irritated parts, loosens the phlegm and mucous, and aids nature to easily dislodge the morbid accumulations. The Pasteur Institute of India stands on a spur about a mile below the main ridge. The road winds downhill among blue pines, and you look out with a large tin-roofed bungalow,

It was a curious sight. In the verandah and on the piazza were gathered the most extraordinary and heterogeneous crowd imaginable. Every now and then the native attendant would appear and call out a few names, and the owners would go in for the daily stab. I made my way in, and found in the library—a large airy room, full of sci-entific and medical works—a friend, who offered to introduce me to the director at once. I walked with him into the operating room with, I must admit, a slight tremor. Horrible stories, are told of the agony of the inoculation, and there is always something disconcerting about antiseptic smells. Only the day before an ablebodied subaltern had fainted dead away. I prayed that I might not play the fool. The acting director, Capt. W. F. Harvey, I. S., a large quiet man, was standing, syringe in hand, table sat an assistant, with a list, deftly arranging the doses and filling the syringes, while the patients, one by one, undid their clothes, laid bare a patch of stomach, black or white, and received the sharp prod of the pleted cards with two dozen hooks syringe with varying expressions of and eyes on each, which means that indifference or pain. The average unskilled man in England gets from 17s. 6d. to £1 a week, so that even with regular work such a man cannot keep his family above the poverty line. And very few unskilled laborers get regular work. Such a wage makes the man's existence one over which worry and terror ever brood. But the wife's lot is worse. The task of making the money go a long way is an extremely diffi cult one.
