King Being Member.

Marlborough Most Celebrated London's most important club from the social point of view, is no doubt the Marlborough, which is situated in Pall Mall, not very far from Marlborough House. It owes its prestige to the favor of the King, who still visits it on occasion and has-his favorite seat in the dining room, which, it need hardly be said, no one would ever dream of occupying. Membership is practically confined to the people whom the King regards with favor or who are in the more exclusive court set. Should His Majesty by any chance visit any of the clubs. to which he belongs, he is at his own request treated like any other member, but it need hardly be said that no one would ever dream of approaching him unless special permission were given for the purpose, and the King always speaks first to any one with whom he desires to converse. One of the most expensive clubs is the Naval and Military, founded in 1862. It is frequently spoken of as the "In and Out" Club, because of the two words placed over the gateway. Entrance to it is obtained by a fee of 40 guineas, and the annual subscription is 10 guineas. Much older, however, are the Guards' and the United Service, which opened their doors within two years of each other, the former having been started in 1813 and the latter in 1815, the year in which Waterloo was fought. The Guards' Club has e strict rule against the admission of strangers, and it forbids the playing of round games of cards. The United Service Club, which moved from Charles street to the premises it now occupies in Pall Mall in 1828, the change having cost close upon £100,000, is commonly called "The Senior," and At night time before attempting to it has some of the most famous men living on its books, the Kaiser and the Czar being among its honorary members, while such great soldiers as Lord Roberts, Lord Kitchener, and Lord Woiseley, are members. The other service clubs include the Army

> Among the political clubs the most important are the Carlton, for the Conservatives, and the Reform, which is strictly Liberal in its principles. The entrance fee to both is £40 and the annual subscription 10 guineas. Contrary to what many people believe, however, the membership of the Carlton and the Reform is not limited to politicians, for many men whose lives are spent far removed from the excitement of the political world belong to them.

The largest of the political clubs is the Constitution, which is housed in Northumberland avenue. It has a membership of 6,500, who pay an entrance fee of 10 guineas or 15 guineas and an annual subscription of 7 guineas or 4 guineas, according as they are town or country members. The National Liberal runs it close in membership, with 6,000, while the Junior Carlton, in Piccadilly, has 5,000 members, and the Junior Conservative, 3,500.

At the head of the scientific and literary clubs stands the Athenaeum, which was founded in 1824 for the association of persons of scientific and literary attainments and artists. and noblemen and gentlemen, patrons of learning, etc. Those who originally came together for the purpose were the Marquess of Lansdowne, the Earls of Liverpool and Aberdeen, Faraday, Chantry, Sir Thomas' Lawrence, Davy, the inventor of the safety lamp; Moore, and seven men who were alterwards to be Prime Ministers of England. The club, which stands on the site of what was formerly Carlsouth, eventually, however, getting ton Palace, is of Grecian architecture, them right again with carbolic oint- and the frieze is an exact copy of the procession which formed the frieze of
