A ROW IN THE HOUSE. Mr. Ames, M.P., is not satisfied with copies of state papers. He wants to touch and handle the originals. He will not charge that the copies are not correct, but he seems to feel that if he could only examine the original dossier he would see or find something Cost of light for 18 hours that has escaped the eye of the copyist. His spirit of curiosity has not been indulged. Had he said that he did not think the copy was correct the record of the department would have been shown to him. But official's papers should not be removed from the fyle on any account. The average man is not systematic in his habits and he misplaces things. Mr. Ames poses as an expert in methods, and he ought to be the first to comcare he has decided to take of his official correspondence. The fact that he does not is an evidence that he has been carrying around a reputation he does not deserve.

THE VOID NOT FILLED. Queen's College Quarterly has found that the second-class magazines of England are getting the benefit of the postal regulations which practically cleared out the American magazines some time ago. It argues, as a consequence, that it is not to the magazines, but to the schools and colleges the people must look for that toning up intellectually which they really need. "The post office department," says the Quarterly, "has done share. It now remains for the educational departments, for the library boards, for the whole people to de theirs." The newspaper press is not indicated among the agencies that are said to be educating the people, but lit is this press which is vitally affected. The post office regulations were changed partly in the interest of Canadian papers, weeklies and monthlies, and one is anxious to know whether they have received the boon which they expected.
