

Get a Man-Tailored Skirt Made

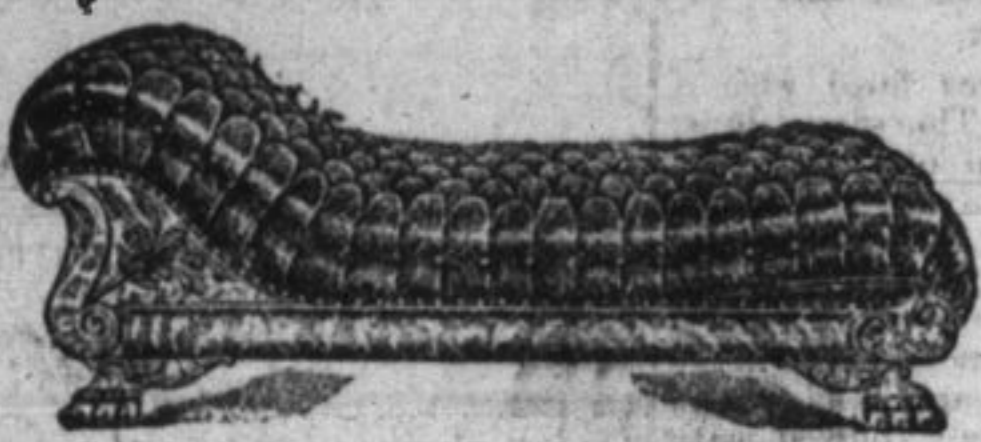

FOR

$1.25.

We have again secured the services of Mr. Rosen, the well-known Woman's Tailor, to make up Walking Skirts, from material bought at this store, for only $1.25. The regular charge for a Tailored Skirt is, as all women know, anywhere from $3.00 to $6.00. So you will see what an opportunity this is. Last year at this time he made up hundreds of Skirts for the women of Kingston at this reduced rate, and they proved entirely satisfactory. This offer holds good for two weeks, beginning Monday, 20th January. No goods except that bought at our store made up. See samples of work in window. New Spring Materials to select from.

THE MASTERS OF FATE

SUBJECT OF A MOST INTERESTING BOOK.

It is a Chronicle of the Many Great Deeds Done By Weak Bodies. A noted Harvard professor died not long ago. During his life he has become very much interested in the cases of many of his students who had ill-health or bodily disability to fight with. He desired to help and encourage them. So he set himself to collect all sorts of instances of people who had been hindered in the race of life with grave difficulties, and yet had achieved nobly. When he died, his widow took this material and made a most interesting book of it, called "The Masters of Fate." It is a chronicle of great deeds done by weak bodies.

In philosophy, for example, Bacon, Kant, Spinoza, Aristotle, and Herbert Spencer were all men of weak bodies. Kant was never entirely free from pain. But he exercised his will to such good purpose that even when suffering from a headache or an oppression of the chest, he could concentrate his mind perfectly on his chosen subject. He accepted life uncompromisingly. There was nothing of the self-indulgence of the invalid about him. He lived above his pain. In working out his salvation, an invalid needs the heart of a cavalier, the soul of a believer, and the temperance of a martyr, and Kant exemplified this.

Janet Newton, Victor Hugo, and Daniel Webster, such weaklings when they were born that their lives were despaired of. They went through all the sufferings of sickly and unpromising youth. But they were determined to be useful, to learn and to know, in spite of constant ill-health. Webster was sent to college partly because he was unfit for work on his father's farm. He wrote to a classmate, "The talent which heaven has entrusted me is small, very small, yet I feel responsible for the use of it."

John Flaxman, the great sculptor, was a feeble, crippled boy. Seated in a chair, supported by pillows, behind the counter in his father's shop, the little cripple spent his time in drawing from plaster casts. He taught himself Latin, and at fourteen was modelling and designing for the Wedgwood potteries. These young lives were weighted down with burdens that most boys would have considered crushing. But they faced fate, and mastered it by slow, patient, everyday effort. They had faith, too—faith in God, who had put them in the world, and faith that He would help them forward. They were not morbid; they were sane and brave. Victory came to them because it belongs, to the courageous.

Alfred the Great, from his early teens, suffered from him in the nature of epilepsy. There were times frequently when both mind and body failed him. But after these attacks he returned, with indomitable will, to his task of ruling a distracted kingdom and resisting the incessant onslaughts of the Danes. "He was constantly," says one biographer, "afflicted with severe attacks of an incurable complaint; he had not a moment's ease, either from the pain it caused him, or from the gloom which was thrown over him by the apprehension of its coming." Yet how few young people who have studied English history in school ever think of Alfred except as strong, active, and unconquerable. His steadfast, splendid soul shines out in the chronicles, and his weak, pain-racked body is kept in the background.

Nelson, the great naval hero, was extremely unpromising material for even a midshipman. His health was very weak, and his uncle, who took him on his own ship as a favor, said that there was little hope of his going to sea, but that "a cannon ball would probably knock off his head the first time he went into action, and so provide for him." After this, in different naval battles, Nelson lost his right arm and the sight of his right eye. On the eve of the battle of Copenhagen he had to lie on his cot, from sheer exhaustion, while giving his orders. Yet England could have better spared a hundred of her most stalwart and healthy sons than this one undersized, frail, exhausted cripple.

The blind and the deaf have in many famous cases overcome their handicap. Milton writing his most splendid poetry in his blindness; Prescott, composing his great history; Homer, the blind bard of Greece; Huber, the blind naturalist; Fawcett, the blind statesman; Beethoven, the deaf composer; Harriet Martineau, the deaf author, and most wonderful of all, Laura Bridgman and Helen Keller, blind, deaf and dumb, yet mastering these afflictions with extraordinary greatness and bravery of spirit. Harriet Martineau called her deafness "The greatest impulse to self-mastery."

Schiller, Stevenson, James Watt, Channing, William Pitt, Pope, Elizabeth Barrett, Browning, Wilberforce, Kepler, Parkman—the list of those who have conquered their disabilities contains all sorts of famous names. In the ordinary ranks of life, also, there are masters of fate. The story is told of a one-legged cripple soldier on an American farm, who turned to ploughman's work and won substantial prosperity. He used that form of plough when the ploughman rises instead of following; but he worked fifteen hours a day and took care of four horses. One of the big Atlantic liners used to have a crippled captain. He sat all day in a wheeled chair, pushed about the decks by an attendant, but he was one of the ablest commanders in the service. A young girl suffering from curvature of the spine is a successful teacher of the little children in a large institution. Sometimes she has had to go into the hospital for a week or two, but only to come back and take up the reins with renewed courage. These are not famous, but they are masters of fate—in the old brave way. "Blessed is he that overcometh," and the world is twice blessed in such noble souls, first in the work they do and again in the inspiration they bring to all who see them fight and conquer. Forward.

BIJOU

Open 10 a.m. Saturdays.

A FEW LAUGHS AT THE NEWS

Didn't the News "Final Statement" about The Bijou sound VIRTUOUS? You'd almost think Brother Black meant it.

TO-DAY and SATURDAY we offer at every afternoon performance TWO ILLUSTRATED SONGS, "Love and Illusion" by Miss Vera Holden, and "Eyes," by John Robert Davis.

But the News didn't confess the name of the "expert" who unloaded that bogus "information" on the editor.

TO-DAY and SATURDAY we present a delightful Society Comedy "Way By Strategy." We never showed a prettier picture. See it!

Having saved 22,000 people from being burned to death in The Bijou, Bro. Black and Bro. Newton ought to present themselves, as candidates, for a slice of the Carnegie fund.

"Way By Strategy" tells the story of a Ballroom Love-Affair. It is beautiful, by staged. Fine decorations, and band, some costumes, Banquets and there is no theatre in Canada better protected from fire than The Bijou.

From the fearful tone of Brother Black's "Final statement" one might almost think that somebody had hurt his feelings.

We also present an unusually perfect and beautiful picture from Italy—A Lethal Drama entitled, "Trust."

DUTY AND HUMANITY

Judging from all the protestations of innocence in that "final statement," one would almost think that the News had been trying to help the theatricians along.

"Duty vs. Humanity" is the story of a young man in Italy who took to preaching in order to save his family from starvation. It is a wonderfully artistic and beautiful picture, and unusually well worth seeing.

Brother Sparring might have TOLD Brother Black that it was loaded, and easy on the trigger!

Italy is the home of art and beauty and these qualities show in every part of this splendid picture.

Those people whom Bro. Black saw smiling over his Sunday theatre-outing were smiling AT him, not with him.

The operating room of "The Bijou" is thoroughly fire-proof, and all the equipment is first-class.

When Brother Black puts on a halo, flaps his wings and writes a "final statement," he looks almost angelic.

The Public is invited to inspect our front and rear exits.

When we twice invited Brother Newton to call at The Bijou and see how badly Brother Black had misrepresented us, we really expected him to accept. But he didn't!

Now, Brother Newton! Cross your heart! If The Bijou had really been an advertiser in the News, would—Eh? Well, perhaps we were a little nervous with Brother Black, but, being so good a Christian, he will, of course, bear no malice.

It Only Costs 5 Cents to Visit the Bijou. The Varsity-Queen's game to-night will undoubtedly be one of the greatest games Kingston has had the opportunity of seeing for some years. A sup of hot chocolate or lemonade will be most appreciated on a cold day. Dispensed at Gibson's Red Cross drug store.

The New Brunswick legislature has been dissolved and the general elections will be held on March 3rd. Don't forget to see this Queen's Varsity game to-night for it will be the best game of the season. The Portuguese government has unearthed a plot to overthrow the monarchy and found a republican. $1,000,000 IN GIFTS. Pinkerton Detectives to Guard Vanderbilt Presents.

New York, Jan. 24.—Pinkerton detectives have been engaged to guard the Vanderbilt mansion for the wedding of Miss Gladys Vanderbilt and Count Szezyani, which will take place next Monday. One man in plain clothes was assigned to cover the interior of the house. Two men in uniform will, until the wedding takes place, with relief, patrol the street outside.

The wedding presents will be exhibited, to-day, but it is not believed that a list will be given out. It is estimated that the value of these gifts will approximate at least $1,000,000. It is because of their extreme value that it was considered necessary to employ the Pinkertons.

PLAYED WITH DYNAMITE. Child in Galt About to Hammer Kitchen Stove.

Galt, Ont., Jan. 24.—A four-year-old member of the family of John McKenzie, Monday, discovered what the youngster termed "a nice toy." It was in the shape of a cylindrical stick, and on examination was found to be dynamite.

There was over a foot of the stick, and the child was about to hammer it on the kitchen stove when the mother interposed and prevented an explosion.

An expert who disclosed the nature of the "toy" said that was enough of the explosive to destroy a brick block. The child said he was given the plaything by some boys passing by the house.
