A GLIMPSE OF MONTREAL

Some Characteristics of Life Canada's Eastern Metropolis.

Half a million people-soon to be a round million. The modern and the medieval. The tense struggle and the calmness of those who do not work, is in the Capital to Talk Over, but only dream. Hurrying creatures, eager eyes; the slow procession of black-robed figures moving on to ternational Boundary-Races church, telling their beads as they go. A city of strong banks and big corporations and large activities; also, a city which still lives in the past centuries, and which kneels in the mud when the Host goes by.

Curious and profoundly interesting to the student are the contrasting elements and conditions of the metropolitan city. Go to the court house, and the eloquence will be that of a decent sentence, if you gave them a The races on the ice track, yester- million dollars, directing tramendous

Forty-two members; ten English-speaking, thirty-two born oratures who might as well be at home for all they can do or say. The slightest provocation brings out all the resources of the tongue of Moliere. The vehemence, the declamation, the magmight well be applied to a profound business school, Bookkeeping, among shareholders upon liquidation been on the sick list at her home in Dr. John H. Fisher, Toronto died question, say, of national policy. It is really all about the town pump.

The eloquence does not make clean or wide streets; it does not give us more parks and playgrounds; it does not construct noble boulevards in the newer portions of the city which will soon embrace the Island of Montreal. It does not, in a word, spell salvation, but it gives color to drabness, and drabness is the general experience.

A difference of race, of tongue, of creed may have complementary advantages and compensations, but it has been found rather difficult to realize them. A homogeneous people would elect men to carry out their will. A dual people, split in two, elects the men who enswer best to sectional appeal. Hence you have two voices, two counsels, and a policy which pulls in opposite directions. Hence, too, you are lacking in united public sentiment, which is the only coercive force you can apply to any sort of government.

The results are seen. An overwhelming majority enforces its ideas. A helpless minority looks on, with the privilege of paying taxes. The sees wrong things which it cannot to mend, but to make worse the situa-Commercially and industrially,

Montreal is supreme in the Dominion The men who direct the activities which give employment to scores of thousands of people are, by their directions, hard-headedness, and modernity, in curious contrast to that other city within a city which refuses recognize the twentieth century Men like Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, Mr. C. M. Hays, Sir Willian Van Horne, Sir George Drummond, Sir William Macdonald, Mr. R. B. Angus, Sir Robert Reid, give the city its energetic, its progressive character, while McGill University supplies that fearlessness of teaching which is of such inestimable value to the minority in

Why Smoke Was White.

A good story book, something after the style of Josh Billings, could be written about the questions that are asked the captain of a passenger boat and the humorous replies generally given by him.

One time a large passenger boat on Lake Ontario, the Juniata, was steaming out of port, and quite naturally the firemen were hard at work "firing up." and so the smoke-stack was pouring forth immense clouds of thick, black smoke. The sister ship, The Tionesta, was just entering the port we had left and was smoking very little, since it had almost

A woman who had been standing near the bridge, noticed these facts and seemed to be at a loss for a solution of them; so she turned to the cap tain and asked the reason why the smoke of our boat was black and that of the sister ship was white. The cap- $3.00 for 2.25. tain, after a moment's hesitation, replied in his usual obliging manner "Madam, the reason for that particular phenomenon is that the coal on the Tionesta is all placed in a large tank and washed before it is used for firing purposes."
