A Romance In Ireland.

At the Grand, on Saturday, March 14th, for matinee and night, will appear Allen Doone, the popular young singing comedian, in his new and successful comedy-drama, "A Romance in Ireland," described as a scenic production in four acts and eight stage settings, whose action takes place in the county Mayo, Ireland, and whose plot is said to be novel and unconventional. In the extreme. In the part of dashing "Larry O'Daly," Mr. Doone is said to find abundant opportunities for the display of his great versatility as an actor, and also for his skill as a singer.

The appreciation of the public is the final test of merit. This is the reason "Salada" Tea has the enormous sales of over eighteen million packets annually. If you do not use it, The "Salada" Tea Co., Toronto, will send you a sample. State whether you use Black, Mixed or Green and the price you usually pay per pound.

The street cars were running until four o'clock this morning, keeping the road clear of ice. In many places around the line the tracks are completely covered with water, and if given a chance to freeze would cause serious trouble.

WAS CAUGHT AT LAST

BURGLAR POSED AS POLICE MEN'S FRIEND.

He Planned Daring Robberies and Got Staff to Execute Them. Some of His Fine Schemes.

London, March 9.—"Professor Moriarty," depicted by Sir Conan Doyle in "Sherlock Holmes," who crouched in a web of crime, has a living counterpart in Joseph Hepburn, sentenced at the Newtonton sessions to three and a half years' penal servitude. Like "Moriarty," Hepburn, referred to by the eight burglars, (one a negro) he employed as "Manuel," simply "pulled the strings," subordinates carrying out the daring schemes he evolved.

Within five months he planned close upon twenty robberies in Southwest London. Recently his subordinates fell one by one, into the net of the law, until he himself was obliged to take part in an ingenious shop robbery in Putney, when a smart detective, Sergeant Davies, who had been following, caught him in the act.

Only 25, "Manuel" was agile, well spoken and cunning to a degree. His "headquarters" were never known. He moved from point to point, sometimes taking rooms in lodging houses at others in small hotels. Even when his men were working out his plans he professed a friendship for the police, approached the detectives trying to trace him, suggested lines of inquiry, and strove to lead them off the scent.

Farts and shops were his principal objective. He is believed to have had a small army of spies and "intelligence men." Having found out by their help every detail of the movements of his victims, and the precautions taken to safeguard till, safe or valuables he was to rifle, he called a meeting of two or more of his satellites and devised a plan of campaign. But when the burglary was committed he was usually far from the spot.

He is believed to have planned the following typical scheme: A woman in a suburban flat received a telegram purporting to come from her husband, asking her to meet him in the city. Half an hour after she had gone, leaving the flat unoccupied, a pantechnicon van, with two men in charge drove up. Every stick of furniture and every article of value was moved out into the van. But for the suspicions of a neighbor, who astonished at the sudden removal, informed the police, and so led to the capture of one of the men, the robbery would have been completely successful.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Two More Good Plays Coming This Week.

The Grand Opera House will offer its patrons, on Wednesday, March 11th, that man of laughter long drawn out, Charley Grapewin, in his greatest character creation, "Mr. Pipp," in the play known as "The Awakening of Mr. Pipp," a farcical play.

London, March 9.—The House of Peers is indeed sadly in need of repair. Not only are the red leather benches in a dingy condition, but the seats in the Strangers' Gallery, in which the peers may invite their admiring friends, are too uncomfortable to deserve the name of seats at all.

"I am genuinely sorry for the peers," said a liberal M.P., yesterday, "but still sorrow for their friends, because the benches in the Strangers' Gallery are as hard and uncomfortable as can be."

"To tell the honest truth, they are merely plain of wood covered with a strip of red carpet as an apologetic attempt at upholstery. Now, we are very much better off in the commons."

The benches in other men's men's there are deeply upholstered—in fact, they merit the description magnificent in comparison with the strangers' benches in the upper house.

"Members of the commons can take their friends to the bar of the House of Lords on obtaining tickets from Black Rod, and I should say that a 'standing seat' there is infinitely preferable to the accommodation up above, for which their lordships can obtain permits for their friends."

A gentleman who has had recent experience of these seats says that there were no backs to them, and that altogether they were "worse than the benches in the gallery of a third-rate provincial music hall."
