Absolutely Cold Proof. When winter set in and Eskimos be gan to visit the ship, it soon became apparent that they were much better clothed to meet the cold than were the white explorers, though the latter had everything that money could command in the way of "an approved arctic outfit." The Finnish boots, or "Finnskor," used by Nansen and other arctic explorers, were excelled both in light ness and warmth by the native boots. A single fur coat of deerskin made in Norway weighed as much as an entire Eskimo suit of outer and inner garments, with boots and mittens included, and was stiff as wet salicloth. at Guadalupe, Mexico, which used to while the native garments were soft as a kid glove. We found a deerskin shirt with the bair turned in warmer, lighter and more comfortable than a woolen, and a cap unnecessary when the hooded coat is worn. There was not an item of the arctic clothing that was not advantageously replaced by garments bought from the Eskimos. son in Harper's Magazine,

A young and afterward distinguished attorney from an up country district of New York state was arguing his first appeal in the old general term of the supreme court. He had been in many legal scrimmages in justices' courts at home, but had never stood in the awesome presence of five sedate and learned judges of the supreme court in general term assembled. His embarrassment was great. He repeated himself and misplaced his words so often that it was quite evident that he must soon be routed by his own confusion unless something should occur to break the spell. Finally, and just as he was floundering the deepest in a chaotic jumble of language and ideas, the presiding judge interrupted with simply because in a moment of weak-

> Some of the Trials of Writers. Professor Lounsbury of Yale calls at tention to some of the difficulties of English grammar with which writers have constantly to struggle in their de sire to avoid obscurity and be correct at the same time. In Harper's Magazine Professor Lounsbury takes up the use of "whose" as a relative pronous referring to inanimate objects and jus tifies its use since nothing better car be devised. He discusses the use or the singular pronoun with the word "everybody," as in "There everybody met his friends." This is manifestly clumsy. Jane Austen, writes the professor, avoided the difficulty by using the plural pronoun, as in her sentence "They say everybody is in love once in their lives." He thinks no satisfac tory solution of this problem can,

Now, the natural constituchemistry produces them daily for comsubstitute the equivalent chemical expressions for the ordinary terms we have employed and say that orange, clinnamon, violet and musk owe their perfume to aldehydes and acetones, aromatic liquids derived from the alcohols, just as the artificial essence of pineapple comes from butyric ether. We have, then, to ask whether the In man body can produce odorous compounds of the kind we have mentioned and under what conditions. As a matter of fact, it does produce a certain number of such compounds in the destruction of organic matter, which is the constant condition of life, in particular acetones and the volatile fatty acids, butyric, formic, acetic, etc. If the process of combustion is normal all these constituents are burned up, completely oxidized, and give as a residue water, carbonic acid and urea. But let some slackening occur in the inmost nutrition of the tissues and the same constituents will escape through the breath, perspiration and the skin."
