The instructors' course at the dairy school opened, on Monday morning, with twenty-five attendants. This course lasts one week, and is used to block out the work for the summer and to take up any branch of the work the students are not thoroughly acquainted with. The results of the recent examinations will be given out tomorrow.

Wild Men in Kingston. To-day the Moorish people, who used to boil Christians in oil and hang them on hooks like dressed hogs, will be on view at the Bijou, also tomorrow.

It is not many years since the Moors were the most dreaded people in the world, and for an Englishman to fall into their hands was far worse than death. Every school boy has read how English sailors feared "capture by the Moors."

Recently the Moors, or people of Morocco, have been much in the world's eye. It is not long since Germany was ready to fight England over them, and only a few months have passed since Great Britain paid $150,000 to get Kaid Maclean away from Kaiseil, the Moorish brigand.

It would cost you $1,000 to pay a visit to Morocco and see the Moors, but you can see them just as well for five cents by going to the Bijou. The picture is by Pathé Freres, and it's worth a dollar to see it. Also a good comedy and a fine song by John Robert Davis.

Death of S. T. Martin. S. T. Martin, a leading resident of Chatham, died Sunday afternoon, after a lengthy illness. He was a prominent member of the First Church, conservative politically, and had served as councillor and mayor for several terms. He leaves a widow, three sons and one daughter—Mr. Harry Martin, Mount Clemens, Mich.; Dr. Herbert Martin, Colorado; Rev. S. T. Martin, Streetsville, and Mrs. J. S. Turner, wife of the manager of the Standard Bank, Kingston.

All teams desirous of entering should have a representative present. The league will be looked after in the same capable manner as was the Kingston Amateur Hockey Association, and should go through without a hitch.

Went Through Ice. William Auburn had a cold bath this morning. He was engaged, putting the ice boat Snow Cloud, in spring quarters, and was walking on the ice in front of the ice boat, near the yacht club house, when he went through. He was pulled out by Allan Macdonald, and was none the worse for his adventure, outside of his wet clothes.

PRESENTATION TO GEORGE HAMMOND.

Mr. Pense Handed Him the Humane Society's Diploma—A Big Crowd Was Present at the Princess Theatre.

On Saturday evening, at eight o'clock, just at the close of one of the usual performances in the Princess theatre, the presentation of the Royal Humane Society's diploma was made to Capt. George Hammond, the popular manager. The theatre was crowded, and great interest was manifested in the presentation.

Dr. J. G. Evans acted as chairman and in introducing Ed. J. R. Pense, M.P., president of the Kingston Humane society, said that it was both a pleasure and a privilege to occupy the position he had been asked to fill that evening. Mr. Pense scarcely needed an introduction to an audience in Kingston. His name was known in every home, and he was a most acceptable position in every heart. He had individual sympathies and broad public activities made him one of the best known and most popular among our citizens. The object of the evening was a noble one, and wherever there was a noble cause to champion Mr. Pense was always ready to play his part.

Mr. Pense received a splendid ovation as he stepped to the front of the platform, and the accompanist struck up "The Maple Leaf Forever."

Mr. Pense said: "Ladies and Gentlemen: All the world loves a hero, and heroism is a virtue largely, if not absolutely, restricted to Christian countries. Heathenism was not conducive to the production of heroes or the virtues of self sacrifice. Heathenism taught men to live for themselves, but christianity taught men to live for others. It was one thing to be a hero on the battlefield when martial music and the shriek of shot and shell stimulated men to deeds of daring and another thing to be a hero in the quiet moment when there was nothing to stir or move the heroic faculty. The Royal Humane Society of Canada had been moved to recognize the heroism of one of Kingston's citizens, who last summer saved from drowning three young girls at Lake Ontario Park. It was not the first time for George Hammond to save lives. He had done it before and will no doubt, continue to do it whenever he gets a chance. It is with much pleasure and pride that I hand Capt. Hammond the parchment of the Humane Society, whose chief patron in Canada is his excellence the governor-general."

Mr. Hammond, in responding, said he was no speaker. When he started out to save the three young girls he had no thought of medal, diploma or presentation. He only thought of saving life. He was glad, however, to receive the diploma and would cherish it as long as he lived.

Dr. Evans then asked the audience to rise and join in singing "God Save the King," which it did most heartily and amid much clapping of hands and enthusiastic demonstration this delightful feature brought to a close. Capt. Hammond is popular with all classes and Kingston as a city feels glad to think that the heroism of another of her sons has been recognized in this way.

THE BY-LAW SUSTAINED

And Pittsburg Will Have Three Years of Drouth. Justice Clute, of Toronto, has refused to quash the local option by-law passed last January by the township of Pittsburg. The point at issue was whether deputy registrars, assessors and poll clerks were entitled to vote on local option by-laws. His lordship holds that the regulations in this respect are as at municipal elections.

The case was argued last week by J. L. Whiting, K.C., representing Pittsburg council, and T. J. Rigney, on behalf of the petitioners against the by-law. One of the petitioners' charges was that minors had illegally been allowed to vote.

AT COOKE'S CHURCH

SKETCH OF LIFE OF LATE DR. GEORGE MATHESON.

An Exposition of His Beautiful Hymn "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go," Given By Rev. Dr. MacTavish.

The usual order was departed from, when instead of a sermon on a scripture text, an exposition was given of the late Dr. George Matheson's beautiful hymn, "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go." A large congregation was present, and listened with very close attention, while Dr. MacTavish gave a short sketch of Mr. Matheson's life. The circumstances under which the hymn was written, and interpreted its beautiful and uplifting sentiments. The hymn was written twenty-six years ago, in the manse at Inverness, a seaport town, in the north of Scotland, where Dr. Matheson was pastor before his translation to Edinburgh. The author declared he wrote the hymn in less than five minutes. He had the impression of having it dictated to him, rather than of working it out for himself. So perfect was the composition, that only one word was changed in the original draft. The word "trace" being substituted for "dimly" in the line, "I trace the rainbow through the rain." The hymn was the outcome of severe mental suffering, which the blind poet preacher had recently experienced.

Dr. MacTavish mentioned several incidents in which the hymn was sung with telling effect, as for example, at a Sabbath morning service in connection with the world's Sunday school convention in Jerusalem, four years ago. One who was present on that occasion, when twenty-six different nationalities were represented, said: "I was so deeply moved, that ere the last verse came round, I could only read with a convulsive sob."

When speaking of Dr. Matheson's blindness, Dr. MacTavish referred to the work of Dr. Moon, the inventor of a system whereby the blind can read. He stated that Moore thanked God for the talent of blindness, and prayed that he might be enabled to use that talent well. It was read in a most marvelous way, for through Dr. Moon's invention, the Bible was read by the blind last year in 492 different languages and dialects.

At the close of the address, Mrs. J. G. Evans sang, with fine effect, the hymn which passed under review.

Convicted at North Bay of Accepting $50. North Bay, March 30.—In the police court, W. A. Brown, division court bailiff, was convicted of obtaining money from the keeper of an alleged dive on the town outskirts, ostensibly for protection from police interference.

Brown returned the money, and sentence was suspended, pending further good behaviour. Crown Attorney Browne not being inclined to push the prosecution further, the charge against Ryan was dismissed.
