A GOOD PRODUCTION.

Cowboy Life Vividly Portrayed at The Grand.

"The Cowboy and the Squaw" drew a very appreciative audience last night at the Grand Opera House. The story centres around Broncho Bob, "Mountain Lion," as he is called by Silverheels, the sweet little Indian squaw. Broncho Bob, the champion cowboy, has unwittingly won the heart of Silverheels, who finds a rival in Ruth Tompkins, the daughter of a visiting Chicago business man. She threatens to kill his pale-face, and being assured by Ruth that she has no desire to take another man's husband, she asks forgiveness and avows her love for pale-face because Bob loves her too. Had Hawley, a rival champion of Bob's, in "white" suits, Ruth, and a constant war wages as a result between the two men. Little Silverheels and her father, Bear's Tooth, a Crow Indian Chief, are the principal protectors and allies of the Mountain Lion and his fiancee. The thrilling situation and suspense ensue admirers of adventure and misadventure. The pathetic finale of the lovers takes place during the wedding festivities of Broncho Bob. Bud Hawley and his men fire into the room and the brave little squaw dies protecting the happy couple. The wedding, too, reveals another rival, Long Pete, Bob's confederate, who brings the bride and bridegroom a gold watch. He avows his love for Ruth, but sacrifices her as Silverheels does, to Bob's worthy superiority. The ride to death through the Mizar of the Montana ranges, introducing a fine steer and the squaw on her broncho, is par excellence. The whole company portrays vividly cowboy life.

Several complaints had been received by the police about her going around the streets begging. She was given clothes at several places, and these she would sell and with the money purchase whiskey. She protested against the charge, stating that her son gave her $2 a week. The magistrate said that if this was the case, there was no excuse for her being down for one month. The accused said that she was begging for a poor family, and characterized her work as that of charity. A drunk was fined $3 and costs, with the option of twenty days.

ELOPED IN THE NIGHT.

Bathurst Couple Taken Home By Constable. Chief of Police White, of Perth, arrived in the city this morning and returned home at noon with Alfred Bedour and Annie Thompson, who eloped from Bathurst. The man was handed over to her parents, and Bedour will be tried at Perth on a charge of seduction. Bedour, so it appears, was a neighbor of the Thompsons, and it is further stated, they eloped in the middle of the night. In the morning she was missed, and the police notified. The affair caused a big sensation in the village. It is claimed that Bedour does not live with his wife, and that she is now in the States.

They Demanded $300,000 Ransom and Got Nothing—Emissary Lured on Ship—Threatened to Hang Prisoner.

London, April 21.—Viscount Mountmorres, an Irish peer, has had an amusing adventure with a party of Moorish brigands, whom he outwitted very much in the same way as Kaid outwitted Kaid Maclean. Lord Mountmorres was cruising off Cape July in a sail schooner when a party of brigands came off in a dingy and told him that the "Baleine," a French steamer, had gone ashore twelve miles to the south, and that the captain and crew, to the number of fifteen, had been captured by wandering brigands. The local kaid was well-disposed towards the prisoners, but he was helpless against the brigands, who threatened to kill the Frenchmen on the spot. The kaid sent a message to Mountmorres begging for help, but warning him that if he attempted to rescue the Frenchmen by force they would all be killed. Mountmorres therefore set sail for Las Palmas, where he reported the affair to the British and French consuls, and the French consul commissioned him to return to Cape July and negotiate for the release of the prisoners. When Mountmorres got back, he found that the brigands were divided into parties. One party claimed to own the Frenchmen, the other party claimed them. Those with the ten dollars a ransom of 20,000 Moorish dollars per head; the other held that their nine captives were worth 30,000 Moorish dollars each. The total ransom demanded was about $300,000. A debate ensued and Mountmorres offered $1,000 for all nineteen prisoners, and added that it must be accepted before sundown, and that he would wait on board his ship for the answer. Next morning a boat put off from the shore, carrying an emissary from the brigands, who had three servants of the kaid. Mountmorres took them on board, asked them politely after health, and told them they were his prisoners. Leaving the brigand on board, he went ashore and met the brigands. "I am going to hang you at once," was his solution. The horrified brigands replied immediately that they would accept the $1,000. "It is too late now," said Mountmorres. "The negotiations are off. But I will agree to exchange my one brigand for nineteen Frenchmen." The brigands protested that it was an unfair bargain, but Mountmorres stood firm, and the nineteen shipwrecked men were duly delivered on board his schooner, unharmed and much entertained by the manner of their rescue.
