The Farmers

The schools are busy turning out doctors, lawyers, preachers, merch ants, and few farmers. Why? asks an exchange. There are lawyers who just miss starvation; doctors who do not practise; not too many preachers, but more than the people support. Competition in mercantile life is so, keen that it is a life of danger. For an intelligent man there is no occupation which promises as much as farming, but the farming must be right. He who does not read or think has no place in intelligent farming. His place is behind a mule and he should follow rather than drive.
