WHAT THE CITY WANTS.

The close of Mr. Campbell's connec tion with the light department, as ar expert adviser, opens the way for new and candid review of the whole the situation. The city now owns all the great works called the public utilities, and they involve business and technical treatment. CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

Why Wot in Ontario ?- Blighting Touch of Spoils System.

Hamilton Herald. Some measures of civil service re orm which will diminish the power of patronage and make appointments to the public service more dependent on merit than they have been, is sure to be introduced at Ottawa before long. A promise to that effect has come rom the government

It would be pleasant to be able to announce that a similar reform is being considered by the government of Ontario. The time is ripe for such a policy in this province. During the three years that the Whitney government has been in office it has made and the political complexion of the civil service has undergone a rapid change. - The application of the 'spoils" system has produced its natural effect. For every official who has group of persons, the relatives and riends of the dismissed official, are awaiting their opportunity show their resentment.

A typical case is that of John Loughrin, late registrar of Nipissing He was dismissed from office, and is now the liberal candidate for that riding. Mr. Loughrin has many conser vative friends who believe that he was unjustly treated, and who will be inclined to make their protest and express their sympathy for him by giving him their support.

The action taken by Charles Collins. of Dundas, also reveals the blighting effect of the patronage system. Mr Collins, one of the most stalwart conservatives in Wentworth, protests against the nomination of Mr. Wilson for the north riding, claiming that it was obtained through the arbitrary action of the "machine." He threat ens to run as an independent candi date unless another conservative who would command the confidence of conservatives generally enters the field He invites "the older and saper" members of the party to "come to the front and lift the party out from amongst the horde of office and patronage seekers into which it has by a great misfortune fallen."

If the conservative party of Went worth has, as Mr. Collins charges, passed into control of a horde of office and patronage seekers; that misfortune is directly due to the patronage system. Not only is it a curse to the to the party in power. It would be good party tactics as well as a high patriotic duty for the Whitney government to abolish it. How fine it would be to hear Mr Whitney make a definite announce ment in favor of civil service reformsuch a reform as would do away with
