THE PULPWOOD CONCESSIONS

Ross Idea to Colonize to Develop Wealth vs. Whitney Idea. Brantford Expositor, An attempt is made to give the Whitney government credit for having made a more favorable arrangement relative to the proposal of the Montreal River pulpwood cohcession than made by the Ross government. The latter concession lapsed because the conditions were so onerous that no one would take hold of it. When the change of government took place new contract was made, and the government boasts that it got a cash bonus of $300,000 from J. R. Booth, of Ottawa, whereas the late government got nothing from the men to whom the first concession was granted. This is true, but the conditions were altered in a material manner. It is to be remembered that from 1902 to 1907 the price of pulpwoad had advanced 150 per cent., yet the present government only got the same price-40c, per cord on the stump-on the main timber spruce. The increase of price paid by the Booth interests does not represent the increase in value of pulpwood. Furthermore, the new bargain lacks another important value. The idea of the late govern ment was to develop settlement requiring the mills to be built on the spot, so that the settler would a market for his pulpwood.

At Espanola, in the Spanish River concession, granted by the Ross government, a thriving village has grown up, giving a market for settlers' produce, as he had a market for pulpwood when clearing his land. What will be the case of the poor settler in the Montreal concession? He will see the pulpwood rafted to Ottawa; he will have no local market for his pulpwood; no village will grow up around a local mill. The Whitney idea strips the land of timber, takes it out of the district. and the whole forest becomes a "slash tions of settlement are destroyed. The Ross government idea was the colonization idea, the development idea. If the forest wealth in the shape of trees was removed it should be converted into thriving villages around the pulp mills, and contented settlers having the advantage of a good local market for their pulpwood. The one contract required the expenditure of a large amount of capital in New Ontario. The other denudes Ontario of its forest wealth, and permits it to be manufactured at Ottawa by men who, for the most part, reside in Hull, province of Que-
