DEATH OF "BIRKENHEAD" HERO Man Who Steered Ill-Fated Troopship

Memories of the tragic wreck of the other works to English, Scotch or troopship Birkenhead, with its deeds of splendid heroism probably unsurpassed in military or naval annals, are recalled by the death at Bristol

He was Thomas Coffin, who, on troopship was the "man at the wheel." and with seven others succeeded in pulling safely to shore in a gig.

Joining the Birkenhead about 1850, when he was 23 years of age, Coffin made three voyages in the vessel with

A fourth voyage to the Cape was to secure further evidence, Magistrate the fateful one in which the Birkenhead was wrecked, and the troops went down to a man, drawn up, as if on parade, on her decks. Coffin has told his own story in quiet, plain phrases that perhaps give a clearer idea of the grim tragedy than a number of lurid phrases. "I was at the wheel, and well remember the sentry calling out to the officer of the watch, 'Four bells, sir. The officer replied, 'Strike them, sen very moment she struck the rock and the sentry went rolling to the deck. below asleep, but were awoke by the came on deck; but on being called to operator over to his (Forrester's) order, fell in and remained so, thus enabling the seamen to get out what
