The French courts have decided that there is no copyright in France in the musical plays. "The Merry Widow," according to the convention of 1892, Austrian works are only protected in France if registered at the French home office within three months of their publication.

As this was not done in the case of "The Merry Widow," the courts have decided that it is public property.

American actors are not very anxious to separate themselves from their cash to benefit the Actors' Society Fund, and there is a deficit this year of $26,000.

Now the society which is offered by theatrical managers, has decided to ask all managers throughout the country to insert a clause in their contracts with actors, providing that on the fourth week of their engagement $2 be taken out of their salary for the benefit of the Actors' Society Fund.

MATTER OF INTEREST.

How the Royal Women of Europe Were Lodged.

Just how the royal women of Europe were lodged has always been a matter of interest to women all over the world. As a matter of fact, the royal women of Russia, England, Spain and Italy, with the other female heads of royal families in Europe have frequently been compelled to live in unsanitary, cold and drafty palaces not fit to compare in comfort or convenience with the homes of the immensely rich hostesses of America.

There are twenty palatial homes in the United States that far excel in many ways the historic palaces of Europe.

Queen Alexandra of England and the Grand Duchess of Russia have a pleasure palace in Denmark, where they frequently spend their summer holidays.

Nowadays the money spent by royal personages on palaces is entirely devoted to improving the old immense piles of masonry which have been built by kings, emperors, popes and cardinals.

Whitehall palace, in England, and the famous castles in Italy and Spain have all been more or less renovated at immense expense for the habitation of present-day queens.

It would surprise many people if they could inspect the state apartments in some of the older residences of queens and see the narrow stairs and poorly lighted hallways that lead from the big rooms.

The household attendants and the servants in royal families suffer many hardships even now, as only the queens and their children were afforded decently lighted and well-heated chambers in the old-time palaces.

Empress Josephine, the wife of Napoleon the Great, when she lived in the Tuileries, tried to make life fairly comfortable for her ladies-in-waiting, but many of them are said to have suffered torment with the cold in winter and to have lived in rooms that today the servants in a wealthy American household would refuse to inhabit.

It remained for the Empress Eugenie, the wife of Napoleon III, to have built a section to the famous Tuileries for her attendants and servants to live in.

It is easy to realize, however, that palaces built before modern heating apparatus was invented and constructed of massive blocks of stone, with narrow, deep casement windows, leave much to wish for in the way of comfort.

Balmoral castle, in Scotland, where Queen Victoria spent so much time, is an historic pile of masonry, built in the style of the Middle Ages, and more a fortress than a palace.

Queen Victoria was in Scotland, Sandringham palace, which is Queen Alexandra's favorite residence, is the most modern of all English royal habitations.

It is heated with a steam system and open fireplaces. The both arrangements are thoroughly modern.

It is said a huge sum, however, for King Edward to obtain one royal home which would not have seemed like a monastery to any wealthy American woman.

Kennington palace has been remodelled, and is fairly comfortable. It was here that the King and Queen of Spain were allotted royal apartments during their last visit to England.

It was here, too, Queen Victoria was born, but when that royal baby first saw the light the palace was little more than a big stone barn, badly lighted with poor lamps, heated only by a coal burst in open grates, and with no baths besides one of tin, to which water had to be carried in buckets by the royal servants.

In fact, King Alfonso of Spain was forced to spend a million dollars just before his marriage to fit up several ancient Spanish imperial palaces so that he would have a home for his bride having the modern conveniences which any young American bride would naturally expect if her husband was a millionaire.

THE GRAVE ROBBED OF ITS PREY! No word of ours could make the evidence stronger than the written words over their own signatures of the man who was the principal in this great cure, and his friends through whom he was introduced to and helped to procure Psychine. John A. Galbraith is a well-to-do farmer, living in Plympton Township, about five miles from Forest. He enjoyed good health until early in 1906, when he had a severe attack of pleuro-pneumonia, which apparently broke up his whole system. In speaking of the case to the Forest Free Press he said: "I did not seem able to gain any strength after the attack of pneumonia. One doctor said that tuberculosis had developed, that I could not recover, and advised me to settle all my affairs as quickly as possible. This was the condition I was in when my pastor, Rev. C. E. Burrell, of the Baptist church, advised me to try Psychine, and procured for me a trial bottle. This was in May, 1906, and at that time I was reduced in weight to 120 pounds. The Psychine did good from the start, and I continued until I had used about $15 worth from Scott's Drug Store, Forest. I gained in weight at the rate of half a pound a day until I went up to 150 pounds, steadily regaining my strength and feeling better. I actually had to have my clothes enlarged, not through any corpulence, but owing to a putting on of good flesh all over. I give this statement for the purpose of showing how Psychine has probably saved my life, and hope that others may be likewise benefited by its use." H. J. Pottysplace, Esq., of the Forest Free Press, says: "The Galbraith cure is considered a miracle here. I know his case was considered hopeless by his physician, and that something had pulled him together. I have only just learned that it was Psychine. He is looking the pink of health, doing his share of the work on the farm, instead of being under the sod, where just one year ago the doctors told him he would be." WIDOW AT TEN YEARS. A Curious Case Arising Out of an Indian Custom. Harper's Weekly. The Indian papers record a curious case arising out of the terrible custom of infant marriage in that country. The daughter of Justice Mookerjee, a learned Hindu, was married when she was under ten years of age, and she became a widow two months after the ceremony. Though he could not resist the early-marriage custom sanctioned by his own people, he stood out against that other custom which condemns the child-widow to life-long misery in her dead husband's family, and he determined to have her married again. The husband's relatives claimed, and obtained a power of guardianship over her child, but before it could be exercised the second marriage had taken place, and there is to be a legal struggle to determine precisely how the claims of the dead husband's family can be reconciled with the living husband's rights. The judge's action will have the support of many Hindus who are eager to break down a custom that condemns thousands of young girls to a life that is almost worse than slavery. But the power of the older schools of thought is great, and British law-makers and administrators, though deploring the evils of infant marriage, must shrink from interfering with customs which claim to have religious sanction.

Buttons Betray Crime. In the Black Museum at New Scotland Yard is a fragment of a button found on the window sill of a house which had been entered by burglars. It was the only clue the police had to work on, but in the hands of a keen-eyed young constable it led to the arrest of its owner, whom the constable met casually in the street wearing the very waistcoat with its broken button of which the fragment had formed a part. The murderer of Mr. Delancey in Bal-size lane, Hampstead, some years ago was brought to the gallows through the instrumentality of a mackintosh button found near the body of his victim.
Almost Choked To Death. Lionel E. Schwartz, a commercial traveller writing from Winnipeg, Man., says: "Catarhazine cured me of asthma after doctors had despaired of my recovering. I seldom slept through the whole night without waking up in a fit of coughing. Sometimes I almost choked to death. I have not been bothered since using Caturhazine. It is the only remedy I have ever met to give such good results." Sold by all dealers in three sizes, 25c., 50c., $1. for two months' treatment, which is guaranteed to permanently cure.
GIRL ELOPED WITH WOMAN. Clever Male Impersonator, Made Mock Marriage. Laura Kelley has returned to her parents in North Yakima while Nell Pickrell, who has spent two months in Tacoma in a disguise of men's clothing, is wealthier as a result of an elopement and mock marriage. Nell Pickrell is, perhaps, one of the most clever male impersonators in the United States. With her boyish ways and tailored suits she has eloped with several women, helped them to spend their money and gone on her way rejoicing. Laura Kelley met the Pickrell woman in disguise, fell a victim to her manners and, after a brief courtship, agreed to elope with her. Nell Pickrell packed her suit case, started on her supposed wedding journey, but the Pickrell woman is supposed to be in Seattle; where she has been arrested several times for impersonating men. Declining the Vice-Presidency. Philadelphia Press. Some pretty big men have declined the nomination for vice-president, and some of them when an election was practically assured. When Madison was nominated for a second term the caucus by which the nomination was made it was before the day of national conventions selected John Langdon, then a senator from New Hampshire, for vice-president, and he declined. New York itself can produce a conspicuous precedent. Silla Wright, then a senator from that state, was nominated for vice-president on the ticket with James K. Polk, in 1844, and declined in resentment of the defeat of Van Buren for the presidential nomination. He was the same year persuaded to run for governor of New York to help Polk's campaign and was elected, but that practically ended his political career. Benjamin Fitzpatrick, a senator from Alabama, declined the nomination for vice-president on the Douglas ticket in 1860. There have been other similar cases, but these are enough to show that the nomination can be declined, and many persons suspect that Governor Hughes is just the person to decline it if he says he will. Testimony Evidence. From the Clerks. Her Mother—I should rather you would not go sailing with that young man, Clara; I don't believe he knows a thing about a sailboat. Clara—Oh, but he does, mamma; he showed me a letter of recommendation from a New York firm he used to work for, and they speak very highly of his salesmanship. The theater was crowded from floor to ceiling on the night of the meeting of a famous football team and their equally well-known opponents, and needless to say, the audience contained in making foul charges behind my back and always escapes the just penalty of a "sprinkling of football mud." "I demand," he demanded, "that you stop this stirring mud-drum." On the stage the hero, with following voice, was denouncing from the gallery belatedly forth the villain for his treachery. "Perhaps he's a pal of the referee's," "How is it that this man persists in Henry."
