HONOR TO MR. GOVIN.
Hon. Mr. Govin is to be congratulated upon his great success at the polls, and for the reason that he went to a province without any device which could prevent a fair expression of public opinion.
The premier could wait for the decennial census before undertaking to change the electoral boundaries. There were some ridings which he could have divided with results very much to the credit of the liberal government. There was the certainty that the conservatives, no longer pouting and refusing to play, like so many children, would rally and elect a good many representatives.
The temptation was strong, therefore, to imitate Mr. Whitney and give the Tories. His government had a good record, however, and he preferred to go to the people without tricks of any kind. The fact that he triumphed against all combinations—some of them very unexpected and very powerful—is very much to his credit.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIETY.
The great Presbyterian council has been concerned, it seems, about the amusements of the day, and especially about the patronage by Presbyterians of the theatre, the ball room, the card room, and the race track. The church has gone into the question very carefully, and has been getting from many quarters the attitude of the people towards these things. There is a difference of opinion, and the committee which reported to the assembly in Winnipeg, said they did not think it wise to frame rules, but that the church should preach great principles, and teach the people how to honor them.
Generally the decision or advice is approved. The church has a duty to perform, namely to warn and counsel its members and adherents against any course, amusement or diversion that injures the moral nature of the individual. The church cannot enforce laws which affect the moral life of the individual. It may attempt this, but it will not succeed, and failure is attended usually by a feeling which is akin to contempt for the law.
The teaching of the church is bound to be sound, if it is correct, and when persisted in faithfully and sincerely will have its influence. Advice unheeded, however, is more valuable than rules regularly or habitually neglected.

THE IRELAND OF TO-DAY.
Ireland is said to be experiencing a great revival. The cause of it is not clearly defined, but if one who studied the situation were asked what was going on he would refer to the great educational schemes, the proposed repeal of the Coercion act, to the decrease in immigration, and to the new life in agricultural and industrial pursuits. How all this set in, or what stimulated it, one might not be able to accurately describe. There is an ebb and flow in the affairs of nations as well as individuals.
Ireland, the land of happiest memories, has been for many years the object of the world's compassion. From it there has gone forth a stream of human energy, and it has contributed to the enrichment of other lands. Everywhere Irish talent and Irish spirit have made themselves conspicuous. Everywhere there has been a regard for Irish wit, eloquence and virtue. But everywhere the Irish felt that they were exiles. Their hearts have been in Ireland, and they have turned to her in sympathy, they have dropped the head in sorrow over her troubles, and have lamented in sackcloth and ashes her deadness and decay.
At last there has been a change. Something has given the country a mighty uplift. The people "at home" have ceased to sigh and have gone to work with a new enthusiasm. The people abroad have come to contemplate, with a glad surprise, the transformation that is going on. If there is anything especially noticeable, it is the incarnation of a new idea, and it is to have the people make the most of their opportunities. "God help Ireland," has been the prayer of nearly a century, and all the while there has not been the recognition of the simple philosophy that God helps those who help themselves. As the revival proceeds and Ireland becomes her real self, there may be an approach to the chief aim of all their ambitions, the right of self-government.

Mr. Whitney, as in 1905, acknowledges that he and his government owe their success in the election to the whole people. The Quebec Mercury says that "he will probably show his gratitude at the proper time by attempting to stifle the people's votes through another gerrymander."

A GREAT RELIGIOUS CONGRESS.
On Monday, the great missionary gathering under the auspices of the Anglican church will begin its sessions in London. It will be the most notable congress of the kind that has ever been held, and be the most far-reaching in its results. It will be attended by six delegates from each diocese outside the British Isles. These dioceses will number 200, and their representatives will be at least a thousand. They will be from Canada, the United States, the West Indies and South America, Asia, Africa, India, Australia, New Zealand, and Gibraltar. Already many of the colonial and foreign visitors have arrived in London, among them the archbishops of Brisbane, Melbourne, and Sydney, and the bishops of Zululand, the Gold Coast, Auckland, Rangoon, Western Equatorial Africa, North Queensland, and Uganda. In addition to two hundred colonial and foreign bishops, there will be some fifty or sixty diocesan and suffragan bishops from the united kingdom.
The meetings will be conducted by sections at seven different halls simultaneously, and will discuss seven different subjects, the most interesting of which, to the general public, will be the problem of the relations of the church to human society, under which head will be considered morality in social and commercial life, socialism and Christianity, and many other matters of political and economic interest.
The very thought of delegates going to London, the seat of the vastest empire that has ever been, from all the corners of the earth, from south and north, from east and west, should stir the heart of the nation, and enliven the impulse towards unity and co-operation. The congress should remind every Englishman that it is the church that, to a great extent, knits together an empire spread so widely over all the globe; that it is the bonds of a common religion, as well as a common mother-country, that unites British men all the world over.
The congress had its origin in the suggestion of Bishop Montgomery, who is the secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. He placed his ideas before the united boards of missions for Canterbury and York, and it was at once acted upon with the aid and concurrence of the archbishops and bishops. London will have to be good, while so many apostles of peace—aggregating with their sympathizers in London many thousands—are engaged in considering the morals of the world. Incidentally London, and its poor, in all conditions of spiritual life, will be under inspection and offer the necessary object lesson of this great congress.

EDITORIAL NOTES.
Queen's College trustees have been left to work out the problem of its relationship with the church and the state to their own satisfaction. It is a grave responsibility.
The Pringle charges as to the impartiality of the Yukon, will be aired in parliament, and with a different effect than that which followed the airing of them in the Presbyterian assembly.
Jerome, according to a special commission, may have his own way of doing things, but he is a great district attorney and a credit to his office. He is the terror of evil doers in every walk of life.
In the Ottawa election one conservative candidate avers that he had the civil servants solidly against him, the other conservative candidate says he had the bulk of the public officials with him. So it goes. One pays his money and takes his choice.
Superintendent Carman thinks the Whitney government should now repeal the three-fifths clause of the liquor law. Why? The people have not endorsed that idea by the vote. The government's policy has been approved, and it is not in favour of majority rule.
L. O. Pelletier is accounting for his defeat in Dorchester by saying that the government promised to be good to the constituency if it elected a supporter of the government. The representative of the Zandring-Zandring combination is not the most acceptable person to talk about electoral impartiality.
The enlargement of the Welland canal—or rather the new Welland, deeper and with fewer locks between Port Colborne and Port Dalhousie—would mean the development of the St. Lawrence route. Suppose the work did cost $25,000,000. That would be about a fifth of the cost of the Georgian Bay canal.
Governor Hughes, of New York, has a right to rejoice over the passage of the race track anti-gambling bills. They are the evidence of what a man can do who is influenced by high motives, and who is aided by courage and pertinacity of purpose. Next to Roosevelt he is the greatest public man in the United States.
Mr. Nickle, after the election, attributed his success to the desire of the people to have the city represented by a supporter of the government. A youthful cartoonist catches the inspiration of the occasion, and sketches Mr. Nickle as he makes his first speech in the legislature, with this as the opening announcement: "Kingston wants nothing."

It seems a pity, however, that the final Marathon trials could not have been delayed until after the election. Almost any of the defeated candidates would be in the form, as far as wind is concerned.
His Defeat Regretted.

The Whig states that Mr. Pense was defeated in Kingston by the use of money and that more will be heard of it. Mr. Pense was one of the best members of the legislature and every fair-minded man must regret his defeat.

The Fastest Things.
Technical World.
Standing at the crossroads, we see a mere black speck in the distance moving with seeming slowness. We hear a purring sound, increasing, developing, then leaping into a roar like thunder. Volumes of dust rise like smoke from the mouth of a fire-breathing monster and the twentieth century dinosaur flies, screams past—moving an automobile racing at a rate of from eighty to one hundred and twenty miles an hour.
We stand at the railway crossing. In the distance an indistinct object winks into view, far beyond where the two lines of shining rails meet together upon the track bed. Or it comes with a swift, surprising, circumference; it whizzes by in a breath-taking rush and is gone almost before we realize that it is a modern electric train. Such a train in Germany has been run at the rate of 130 1/2 miles an hour.
At the sea shore we hear a scream, thin and piercing. A boat stern shrills its warning. Something rises from the water, among, splashing and tearing frantically through the ocean waves. It is past ere we get our glasses to bear upon it, it is distant again. Merely a racing motor-boat, trying to make more than thirty miles in an hour on the watery turf.

Leading Up To It.

Young Hopeful—"Papa, it worries me awful to think how much trouble I give mamma."
Papa—"She hasn't complained."
"No, she's very patient. But she often sends me to the stores for things, and the stores are a good way off, and I know she gets cross waitin', when she's in a hurry."
"Not often, fancy."
"Oh, she's most always in a hurry. She gets everything all read-for-baking, an' finds at the last minute she hasn't any yeast; or she gets a pud-din' all mixed, and finds she hasn't any nutmeg, or something; an' then she's in an awful stew, 'cause the oven is all ready, and may be company comin'; and I can't run a very long distance, you know, and I feel awful sorry for poor mamma."
"Humph! Well, what can we do about it?"
"I was thinkin' you might get me a bicycle."

A pretty wedding was solemnized on June 3rd, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Collins, Raleigh street, Chatham, when their eldest daughter, Miss Nellie Collins, formerly of Napanea, was united in marriage to Charles E. Goyou, of the Fers Marquette, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Goyou.

Miss Roselle Knott, the eminent actress, has been very seriously ill at the home of her sister, Mrs. Charles Knott, 56 Cowan avenue, Toronto, but is well out of danger, and will be able to go to New York within a day or two.
Miss Knott was seized with an acute attack of neuralgia of the heart and so serious did her condition become that two physicians were summoned. Her friends and admirers will be relieved to hear that no further ill results are apprehended. She and her daughter, Miss Knott, spend the summer at her home on Long Island.

A Rich Dress Hat.
A lovely dress hat is shown in the drawing, the model being a good one in various combinations and colors. Peacock, a shade between blue and green, was used in the original, the straw being a fine Milan. The feathers were in the form of a thin flounce of the catch blue, mounted on a wire and taken around the crown. White gardenias were applied in the centre of this flounce, and the feathers were clustered high at the left side.

A Curious Libel Suit.
New York Post.
Henrik Sienkiewicz, the Polish author, has just been sentenced in Vienna to a fine of 300 crowns ($60), or thirty days in jail, in as curious a libel case as one could well imagine. It will be remembered that a number of Ruthene students, imprisoned for complicity in the outbreaks against the government, aroused the sympathy of all Europe about a year ago by a "hunger strike," refusing to eat as a protest against their imprisonment. Sienkiewicz apparently took no stock whatever in this strike, for in a reply to Bjornson's Bjornson's appeal for the students, he referred to them as "having arranged a hunger strike with beefsteak and wine sent to them by their friends." When the students were released and read Sienkiewicz's article, they promptly sued him for libel, alleging grave injury to their reputation, and asserting that their strike was not a comedy, but a genuine tragedy. Sienkiewicz's offense they deemed the more reprehensible because of his world-wide literary fame. At the trial the students were able to prove that they had not only declined food sent to them by friends, but had finally been taken to the hospital because of the weakness resulting from their self-imposed privations. The jury held that Sienkiewicz should be punished for insinuating that the plaintiffs had been guilty of an attempt to deceive the public.

A Song Of Empire.
By Rev. Prof. W. Skat.
No foreign lands of alien speech
Our broad domains divide;
Our British ports speak each to each
Across a friendly tide.
From far Hongkong to Singapore,
The course is safe and free;
Quebec is joined with India's shore,
While Britain rules the sea.
Where'er far-reaching ocean waves
The last colonial stand,
Uniting seas their willing waves
Extend from land to land;
White Neptune's lastest realm is ours,
The merchant's course is true;
His fears no longer of foreign powers
While Britain guards the sea!
By seamanship this island rose
An empire vast to claim;
And still the English language grows
Its daily use and fame;
But should the weakened fleet give way,
Supremacy would fall;
And checked would be our slightest way
By every hostile sea.

While Mr. Madole was addressing the people from the balcony of the town hall, on Monday evening, at the supposedly successful liberal candidate, a couple of gentlemen were in earnest discussion, and one of them was heard to remark, "I wonder what in the devil became of that $6,000."
They evidently thought Madole had been elected, but they could not see how it would be possible if $6,000 had been faithfully distributed.
