SPRING IN THE NORTH

CANADIAN WOODSMAN WRITES OF GREAT NO-MAN'S LAND.

Freedom of the Forest — Bird Life
Make the Woods Musical—Camping on Rainy Lake—Where Robins Build and the Red Deer Play—All Nature Now at Its Best — Likes the Old Log Hut.

I was born in the heart of a northern forest, says an old Canadian woodsman, and in my wanderings my steps have ever gone most willingly back toward the pine-covered hills and the grassy glades that slope down to cool, deep waters. The winter has carried me far, but the lakes and waterfalls, the bluffs and the bays of the great northern No-Man's Land are my home, and with Mukwa the bear, Mah-engin the wolf, Wash-gish the red deer, and Ah-Mook the beaver, I have much consorted and have found their company quite to my liking.

But the fates have so dealt with me that for two years I have not been able to see the smile of springtime breaking forth upon the rugged face of my northern No-Man's Land. I have had glimpses of it, merely, among crowded houses, out of hospital windows. Still, my mind is native to the forest, and my thoughts and fancies, breaking their way to the open, like the free wild things they are, on bright days of springtime to the wild land where the change of season means what it never can mean in the town.

What does spring mean to you town folk, anyway? I will tell you. It means lighter clothing, dust instead of sleet, the transfer of your patronage from fuel man to ice man, a few days of shady streets and baseball instead of hockey.

What does it mean to the man of the woods? That I will try to tell. It means that the deep snow which has mantled hill and valley for five months has melted into brooks and rivulets which are winding and splashing away to find the ocean from whence they came. It means that the thick ice, which, throughout the long winter has imprisoned the waters of the lakes in now broken, and the waves, incited by the south wind, are wreaking vengeance by beating it upon the rocks of the northern shore, until, subdued and melted, it returns to be a mere part of the waves again. Instead of the hungry winter howl of the wolf or the whining whine of the sneaking lynx the air is now filled with happier sounds: ducks are quacking; geese are honking; waves are cackling as they fly northward; squirrels among the spruce trees chatter noisily; on sandy ridges woodchucks whistle excitedly; back deep in the birch thicket partridges are drumming and all the woodland is musical with the song of birds.

The trees, through whose bare branches the wind all winter has whistled and shrieked, are now sending forth leaves of tender green and the voice of the wind caressing them is soft as a lute as musical as the song of birds. Flowers are springing up, not in the rigid rows or pre-arranged squares of a mechanically inclined horticulturist, but surprising one by elbowing themselves out of the narrow crevices, or peeping bashfully out from behind fallen trees, or clinging almost upside down to the side of an overhanging cliff.

My camp on Rainy Lake faces the south, and in front is a little stunted black ash tree, tall, gnarled, twisted and homely that it is almost pretty. I refrained from cutting it down because of its attractive deformity. In the springtime, a few years ago, a pair of robins chose it as their nesting place. One bright Sunday morning as the nest was in course of construction, I was sitting in my doorway watching the pair. The brisk little husband was hurrying toward the nest with a bit of moss, but the wife, who was sitting on the nest, was so busy with her little whistling that she could not make him so very happy he could not but tell of it. Alighting on a twig he dropped the moss, opened his beak, and poured forth in song the joy of his body no longer content. That is the joy of a northern No-Man's Land in the month of May.

We are so happy in our woodland home that we wish everyone might share it with us. But perhaps some would not enjoy what we enjoy, or see what we see and some are prevented from coming by the duties of other calling, and each must follow the pathway of his own destiny. For myself, I only want my little log cabin with the wild vines climbing over its walls and clinging to the mud-chinked crevices, where I can hear the song of wild birds, mingle with the sleepy hum of bees mooring from blossom to blossom about the doorway, where I can see the timid red deer, as peeping out of the brush, it hesitates between the fear of man and the temptation of the white clover growing in front of my home, and where I can watch the endless procession of waves following each other up the bay. Give me the necessity of working for my daily bread so that I will not feel as though I were a useless cumbrance upon the earth; allow me an opportunity now and then of doing a kindly act, even if it be no more than restoring to the shelter of his mother's breast a fledgling that has fallen from its nest in a tree top. If I may have these I will be happy, and happier still if I could know that when the time comes for me to travel the trail, the sands of which show no imprint of returning footsteps, that I might be put to rest on the southern slope of the ridge beside my camp, where the sunshine chases the shadows around the birch tree, where the murmur of the waves comes in rhythm to the robin's song and where the red deer play on moonlight nights. Neither will I fear the snows of winter that come drifting over the bay, driven by the wind that whines through the naked tree tops, nor the howl of the hungry wolf for what had no terror for me in life need not have afterward.

WANTED TO STAB CONSTABLE.

Man "Out For a Time" Creates Some Trouble.

At an early hour this morning, the hoarders at a Bagot street house were startled, when they heard some person shouting to smash in the front door. Some of the male members of the household tumbled out bed, and upon going to the front door, they were startled to find that a drunken man had taken full possession of the front steps. The man had in his possession a bottle of whisky. When requested to get away, he refused, and then a call was sent to the police. Constable Mullinger ordered the man to go home, but still he refused, and the big officer hustled him off to the lock-up. On the way to the station, the drunk pulled a knife, and attempted to stab the constable, but the latter soon confiscated the dangerous weapon. He endeavored to get away, but his efforts were useless, when such a strong arm of the law had hold of him. When he sobred up at the police station, he gave the name of William Robinson, and that he was a laborer. He will be arraigned in the police court, to-morrow.

It Will Go Down in History.

The celebration in Quebec in July will interest the whole world, because it will be on a scale of grandeur and magnificence never approached in this continent. The historical pageants, embracing historical procession and tableaux, with thousands of historical characters, will be spectacles never to be forgotten. The naval demonstration by a fleet of nations, under the aegis of the British flag, will be of great interest. Millions of people will want to see the events of the celebration and cannot. The Standard, of Montreal, the great national illustrated paper published by George Murray Publishing Co., will issue the greatest commemorative number ever seen in this continent, reproducing the events to the very life, including supplements in colors, which will astonish even the illustrated papers of England and France. Those who have seen the advance sheets of the Standard, Tercentenary, say it is something wonderful, and it is certain the publishers will never be able to supply the demand. It is to be sold at only 50c., while each of the many supplements is worth the whole amount. These orders by the 25th June direct or through dealers will be sure to get copies. After that date, ordering must take their chances. It will be first come, first served. It is learned that the orders are pouring in from all parts of the continent. You should order from your local news-dealer. If you send direct to the publishers, add 10c. per copy for postage.—Exchange.

Where To Find God.

Would you find God? You will find Him in the great movements of the present time—in the endeavors made by men to establish justice and realize brotherhood and promote peace. You may find traces of God in the past, but God Himself you will only find in the present. Sinai will sound its echo, but here and now there sounds the voice. In the sacred books of the past God has written, but in every field of nature and on every heart of man God writes. Move not a step from where you stand. Look not a single foot away, or a single moment behind. God is here—the living, moving, inspiring, eternal God!
