

DIANAS OF MODERN DAYS

American Women to Whom a Strenuous Form of Outdoor Sport Appeals

Mrs. Max Fleischmann of Cincinnati Has Hunted in Africa and in the Arctic.

In Colorado Miss Anna Morgan, daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan, the famous New York financier, is known to hunters as "The Diana of the Peaks." Mrs. Max C. Fleischmann, of Cincinnati, has taken part in big game hunts in Africa and has shot polar bears in the frozen north. Mrs. J. W. M. Cardozo, of Philadelphia, has sought sport in the jungles of India and Africa, as well as in the wilds of Canada.

"In archaic art," authorities state, "Diana often appears as winged, and grasping two lions or other wild animals." No modern Diana, so far as known, has ever been photographed in the act of grasping living lions, but more than one has exercised her skill in marksmanship on the king of the beasts. Not a few women of this generation have sought big game as boldly and as confidently as men.

Historic romance has given large place to gentle Priscilla, the Puritan maiden. Further, annals of womanhood will undoubtedly record as prominent a place to famous Dianans of modern times, antitheses of Priscilla in many ways and yet her successors in truly feminine graces.

More women may be numbered with the mighty hunters of the land than one would imagine. It is a time-honored job to depict a woman as fainting at the sight of a mouse—what can we say of one who boldly shoots bears in the Rockies or lives in African jungles?

One of the most prominent of America's women hunters is Miss Anna Morgan, who, when she feels inclined, leaves the social engagements of New York and Newport and plunges into the wilderness of Colorado with all the daring of the toughest.

The daughter of the great banker no more fears facing wildcats, lynxes, coyotes, mountain lions or even grizzlies than she dreads the scrutiny of the elite in the drawing-room. She is as much at home with the rifle in her hand as she is with her jeweled fan during a ball.

Miss Morgan is a thorough sports-woman. With parties of friends she has gone west and spent a month at a time in the wildest parts of the forests. Clad in a sweater, short skirts and rubber boots the young woman has often ridden off on perilous trails, gun swung over her shoulder, or for hours has stood in trout streams waiting for a bite.

On one of her trips she went through 125 miles of the wildest country. During her stay in Colorado Miss Morgan usually lives under tents, eats her meals off tables of bark and thoroughly enjoys roughing it.

In her father's palatial mansion, on Fifth avenue, New York, hang the heads of numerous deer and elk, felled by the daughter in the west. On one trip Miss Morgan got one bear, two buck deer, two grouse and enough trout, it is said, to stock a stream.

brought down her big seven-pronged buck at 300 yards on her first shot. She caught him plumb through the heart.

Few female Nimrods can boast of the experience of Mrs. Max C. Fleischmann, of Cincinnati, who has hunted polar bears eighty degrees five minutes north, and tigers and hippopotami in the jungles of interior Africa, right on the equator.

Mrs. Fleischmann is twenty-six years of age and strikingly handsome. Some time before her marriage, in December, 1905, Mr. Fleischmann said to her: "Where shall we take our honeymoon north?"

"The West Indies would be charming," she replied. "True, and how about a trip to the north?"

"To shoot polar bears?" She clapped her hands. "Delightful!" "Go!" he announced. And it was.

Mr. Fleischmann was an experienced hunter, and as the inventor of a comfortable fortune was able to cruise the world in his yacht Hawatha, journeying whithersoever he pleased.

When their friends learned they were going to the Arctic they shivered. A honeymoon poleward! Incredible! With the coming of summer they sailed for Tromsø, Norway, where a chartered ship awaited them. With the party were a number of friends. They set sail for Spitzbergen and the frozen north, and for eleven weeks were out of communication with civilization.

"We didn't suffer many hardships," said the fair huntress on her return. "It was cold, of course, but we had a splendid time. Hunting was good." And it must have been, for she had shot and killed two polar bears, besides a number of seals, reindeer, blue foxes, and many specimens of birds.

gracious woman and a popular hostess. Tall and handsome, in her drawing room she appears like one of the French grand dames, possessing dignity and poise. On horseback she is the Diana of the chase. Her skill with the rifle equals that of the most trained huntsman.

When it comes to horsemanship, however, nearly everybody has heard of Mrs. Philip Allen Clark, of New York. As Miss Greta Pomeroy, chum of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, she won laurels of the race before she was crowned with the roses of Cupid. It was Peter Fenimore Collier who once said to Miss Pomeroy: "What a stunning rider you would make," and offered to coach her. Miss Pomeroy was enthusiastic.

Before this, in 1894, Miss Pomeroy gained the reputation of being the best woman revolver shot in the United States, and, as a swimmer, had won many races along Bailey's Beach at Newport. Besides this, she has followed great game in the west, and ranked first as the woman fencer of New York.

In fact, her fame as a huntress of big game more than equalled her reputation as a rider. She, like Miss Morgan, has shot bears in the Rockies.

But when she got into a saddle, she found herself, as she laughingly declared, she rode constantly, following the latest fads, going the breathless pace of the Meadowbrook foomies, and hunted constantly in New Jersey, on Long Island and at Newport. She was soon in a class with Mrs. Laidlaw and Mrs. Kerochan.

After the announcement of the engagement of Miss Pomeroy to Philip Clark, quite a time elapsed before the wedding in 1902. What was the matter? friends asked. Then she whispered: "She's waiting until she gains recognition as a leading cross-country rider." She gained the recognition she married.

When, some seven or eight years ago, Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., of the Meadowbrook Hunting Club was asked why she rode astride, she replied, with a little exclamation of surprise: "Why, because it's easier!"

It will be remembered that when go alter peasants, grouse, wild duck and other birds.

Two of the most expert shots are Mrs. E. M. Holmgren and Mrs. R. M. Bagley, of Camden, N. J., who, after trips to Virginia, return to their homes with record bags. They enjoy such outings to the utmost, and always have proofs of their prowess to show.

To Keep Cool. Washington, June 27.—Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, food expert of the government, has a few simple rules for eating and drinking during the heated term. Here are his recommendations:

1. Eat one-fourth less in summer than in winter.

2. Eat meat in moderation. Select the lighter meats.

3. Banish all alcoholic beverages.

4. Eat most largely of cooked fruits and vegetables.

Scientific Aptitudes Descend to Son—Rarely to Daughters. Paris, June 27.—According to a French review, two Dutch savants, Messrs. Heyman and Weismann, after long and patient investigation, have just established a sort of scale by which to measure the transmissibility of hereditary powers and defects.

They have been aided in their researches by more than 3,000 of their colleagues, who have carefully studied the character of all children who came within range of their professional attentions.

It appears that the faculty of coordinating thoughts and expressing them rapidly is almost invariably inherited from the father. Over forty-five per cent. of the sons of scientists have the tastes and aptitudes of their fathers.

As for girls, only fourteen per cent. inherit these desirable quantities. When it is the mother who occupies herself with scientific labors, the result is much more striking. One hundred per cent. of the boys inherit the qualities and not a single one of the girls.

All these traits of character which denote good nature or sympathy, in the majority of cases are derived from the paternal influence.

Criminal tendencies are also due to the father, likewise dementia, epilepsy and imbecility. Children inherit more readily from their mothers the love of games and their artistic capabilities.

This is not true, however, of literary talent. The Dutch scientists gravely add that it is generally from the maternal side that children inherit more fondness for fine clothes and good looks.

CRAWLED TO SAFETY. Riddled By Bullets Yet Escapes Death. St. Petersburg, June 27.—The remarkable case of a man named Lust, who was sentenced to death for taking part in the revolt in the Baltic provinces in 1905, came before the appeal court of the senate.

Lust was taken out for execution, and twelve bullets from the rifles of the firing party passed through his body, which was left lying where it fell.
