MODERN CRUSOES

STARVING SAILORS PICKED UP BY BRITISH WARSHIP.

Were Wrecked in March—Had Needles Made of Pocket Knives and Knives of Cask Hoops—Had Given Up All Hopes.

Victoria, B.C., July 2.—While sending a farewell message, fastened in a quill to an albatross neck, one of a series of daily messages recording briefly the story of the wreck on Antipodes Island, of the French barque President Felix Faure, twenty-two starving French sailors were rescued by the British warship Pegasus and brought to Sydney shortly before the sailing of the Marara, which arrived to-day.

The castaways, who lived a Crusoé life, fashioning their utensils in the same resourceful way as the marooned on Antipodes Island, south of New Zealand, and near where the survivors of the British barque Dundalor were rescued before, after their vessel drove ashore during March last.

When given up hope of rescue when the British warship was sighted, the men were ravenous when rescued, having been on short rations for some time. They had needles made of blades of pocket knives, dinner knives made from an iron hoop torn from a cask washed from the wreck, fish hooks from bent pins, spoons from shells, hair combs from brush thorns, etc.
